WASSOOKEAG SUMMER SCHOOL

THE DUAL PROGRAM—1926

WASSOOKEAG was the first school-camp offering the scholastic facilities of an accredited summer session and the stimulus of outdoor activities developed on a summer campus.

The dual program of School and Camp was originated at Wassookeag in 1926. Blending to a nice balance both education and recreation, the School-Camp combines the best features of conventional summer institutions—the scholastic and athletic program of the summer school; the outdoor setting and recreational facilities of the summer camp.

The boy who has reached the age of thirteen finds the dual program quite in tune with his interests. The Student is at once a Camper. The Camper is at once a Student.

*Died October 2, 1945

IN response to a letter from Richard S. Chapman, President of the Alumni Council, twenty-four alumni clubs have named their representative members of the enlarged Council. Plans for a midwinter meeting on the campus are under way. A special committee, of which Alden H. Sawyer is chairman, is to fix a date, probably at the time of some intercollegiate athletic event, and arrange a program of talks and discussions of interest to council members and alumni generally. Chairman Sawyer will be glad to receive from any alumnus or club suggestions for subjects to be considered at this meeting. His mail address is Box 1200, Portland, Maine. The study and report upon (1) certain phases of undergraduate life, (2) the admissions and public relations policies of the College and (3) an appropriate war memorial, which the Council voted to make have been deferred until the Executive Committee can determine what specific reports will be most helpful to the College and how best to prepare them.

AN activity, which is not strictly an alumni activity but one of real interest to all Bowdoin men, is the effort now being made to organize a Bowdoin Fathers Association. For several months, a group of men whose sons have attended Bowdoin have been endeavoring to find a way to interpret into effective action their desire to help the College. At its recent meeting in Boston, the Executive Committee of the Council considered the plan of organization which was submitted by Mr. Herbert S. Holmes of Portland on behalf of a group of Bowdoin fathers in several eastern cities. The proposal was given the committee's hearty endorsement and approval and steps have been taken to form a skeleton initial organization. Mr. Holmes states that all fathers of Bowdoin sons are to be eligible to membership and that eventually he hopes mechanics may be devised to make that fact known to every man whose son had been or is an undergraduate at Bowdoin. No list of fathers' names and addresses is readily to be had. Because fathers of sons in recent classes seem most easily identified, invitations to join will shortly be sent to them with an appeal for their assistance in reaching others. The organizing group is confident that through the medium of a Bowdoin Fathers Association there can be brought to the College much constructive service, particularly in the fields of publicity and student enrolment. The ALUMNUS views with keen interest the development of this new source of help and support.

TO the tribute which appears elsewhere in this issue, the editorial staff of the ALUMNUS adds its expression of sorrow and very real loss in the untimely death of Professor Hartman. Not only has he faithfully and painstakingly edited the informative and readable Books section of our magazine but he has always during his several years of service given willingly and generously of his valued counsel on all the phases of makeup, content and publication. Ever prompt, he had, prior to his last illness, completed the reviews and comments for the November ALUMNUS.

THESE lines are to accord recognition to two alumni who have lately ended long terms of valued service to Bowdoin. In June 1944, John W. Riley '05 surrendered his duties as secretary to the Board of Trustees to William H. Farrar '14. At the 1945 Commencement, Lawrence W. Smith '13 was succeeded by Joseph A. Aldred '24 as secretary to the Board of Overseers. The small fees granted for discharging the duties of these two offices in no way measure the services rendered. The long years during which Messrs Riley and Smith were recording officers of our Governing Boards were outstanding contributions, to be ranked with the host of other such contributions which Bowdoin Alumni constantly make to their college. To them and to their successors our warm thanks and appreciation.

The Chapel

Professor Athern P. Daggett '25 Reviews Its First Hundred Years

THAT "all undergraduates shall . . . attend daily prayers in the Chapel under such regulations as the Dean may formulate" is a provision natural to the by-laws of a College which in answer to petitions, among others that of the association of ministers of Cumberland County, was chartered by the General Court of Massachusetts with the stipulation in its charter that its endowments should be used "in such manner as shall most effectually promote Virtue and Piety." Tradition has it that the first President of the College called his eight young men to morning prayers in his study by rapping his cane on the bannisters of Massachusetts Hall at six o'clock in the morning. The Boards were early conscious of the need for a suitable place for devotions and the second building erected on the campus was the old wooden chapel building which appears in the familiar 1821 print of the College. The building served both as chapel and as library for fifty years, but never with much satisfaction to anyone. It was cold and cramped, and its wooden structure emphasized its inferiority as Maine, Winthrop, and later Appleton, joined Massachusetts on the expanding campus. For many years, however, all proposals to enlarge it, improve it, or replace it came to naught.

The present chapel is a monument to the fourth President of the College, Leonard Woods, who had the vision of the building he wanted and the fortitude and persistence to see it through to completion. The project dominated the first fifteen years of his presidency. Himself a minister he came to the College from the Bangor Seminary and it was natural that he should feel the need for an adequate and dignified place of worship. His visits to the English universities and his travels in Europe, which he undertook to prepare himself for his new duties at Bowdoin, confirmed him in his opinions. Shortly after taking up his duties in Brunswick he consulted an architect, Richard Upjohn of New York City, who, working closely with the President, designed the present Romanesque church. This style rather than the Gothic, for which Mr. Upjohn is best known, was selected, certainly because of its greater economy, and possibly because it was more in keeping with the Congregational tradition of the College.

The chief problem in the construction was neither architectural nor mechanical. It was financial. The original estimate of the cost was fifteen thousand dollars. That was soon found to be insufficient and before the building was completed slightly more than three times that sum had been spent. The College had laboriously raised about five thousand dollars by popular subscription when the campaign bogged down. At one time former Governor King promised to give the sum then estimated as necessary to complete the project, but he died without being able to fulfil his promise and the estate was insufficient for the purpose. Eventually most of the cost of construction was met from the proceeds of the Bowdoin estate.

The cornerstone of the Chapel was laid just over a hundred years ago, July 16, 1845, with full masonic ritual. It was a gala occasion which has been described for us by an enthusiastic correspondent of the Maine Democrat. There was a special steamboat from Portland; a triumphal arch "built 'twas said by the students with the assistance of the fair ladies of B."; a procession with three brass bands; the pomp and pageantry of lodge and college; "ladies beyond number seated upon heaps of stone around . . . nearby windows filled with fair faces"; and an orator to grace the occasion, Charles S. Daveis, the Portland admiralty lawyer who was a member of the second graduating class. President Woods read from the scriptures, "I was glad when they said unto me," but it was to be ten long years before he was to be able to apply the psalmist's precept to this particular "House of the Lord." In 1848 the south wing was completed for use as a temporary chapel. A year later the north wing furnished a gallery for the college art collections and a lecture room for the mathematics department. In 1852 the celebration of the semi-centennial closed with a spectacular "illumination." The unfinished auditorium was brightly lighted and its clerestory windows were filled with transparencies bearing the names of James Bowdoin and of the presidents of the College. Three years later the building was finished and it was dedicated in June, 1855, with appropriate ceremonies. The six panels for the murals were expectantly left vacant, but it was sixty years before they were all filled, benefactors of requisite generosity being somewhat harder to find than had been anticipated.

The granite used in the building came from Brunswick only a few miles from the Chapel itself. The walls were raised by workmen from New York. The black walnut woodwork was installed by Brunswick's best known family of builders, the Melchers. The finished structure has been variously evaluated. Samuel W. McCall in his life of Tom Reed says that among American college chapels it has not been surpassed "in appropriate beauty." On the other hand Parker Cleaveland has been reported as declaring that it could be bowed down to without sin since it was not like anything on the earth, in the heavens above, or in the waters beneath.

The building has served the College for much besides a place for the stipulated "daily prayers." Bannister Hall behind the auditorium was the college library until the erection of Hubbard Hall. It was then transformed into a classroom which has at various times housed "the President's course," for many years President Hyde's famous philosophy course, and more recently during the years of World War II, President Sills' course in comparative literature. It has also served Professor Burnett as his classroom during most of his forty years of teaching at Bowdoin. The art collections which were at first housed in the north wing were later moved to the room over Bannister Hall until they, too, had a building of their own.

The room was then largely unused, though it served for a time as a mechanical drawing laboratory. It is now occupied by the pipes of the Curtis organ. For many years now the north wing has been the headquarters of the music department and its activities, and the south wing has served as office and laboratory for the psychology department.

The main auditorium was used for some years as a general auditorium as well as for chapel services until the building of Memorial Hall provided a more suitable place for the former. In the recent war years it has been used for the special graduation exercises which have followed the termination of each trimester. It has also been increasingly popular for Bowdoin weddings, especially with the men of the Naval Radar School.

Perhaps more than any one building, Bowdoin men think of the Chapel when they think of their College. However reluctantly they may have obeyed the injunction to "attend daily prayers in the Chapel under such regulations as the Dean may formulate," most of them look back gratefully and when they return, whether casually after long absence, or, as now, eagerly from the wars, they generally drop in to review old memories and to see their successors.

Mr. Justice Burton

PRESIDENT Truman's appointment, on September 16, of Harold H. Burton '09 as an Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court was acclaimed by Bowdoin men everywhere and most joyously by those of his college generation. Professor Emeritus Wilmot B. Mitchell '90 devoted his recent Bowdoin-on-the-Air broadcast to the man who became the first Bowdoin alumnus on the Supreme Court since the death in 1910 of Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller '53. We herewith quote generously from Professor Mitchell's informed and appreciative evaluation of Harold Burton, the man.

Son of Dr. Alfred E. Burton '78, Sc.D. '13, long professor and dean at Massachusetts Institute of Technology and for over thirty years an Overseer of Bowdoin; brother of Felix A. Burton '07, successful architect; father of two Bowdoin sons, William '37 and Robert '45; himself an Overseer and recipient of his alma mater's honorary LL.D.; Harold Burton is indeed a Bowdoin man and one over whose elevation Bowdoin men are pleased and proud.

"But, of course, Justice Burton's college friends are pleased and proud not simply because of his appointment to this high office; not simply because his fellow senators held him in so high esteem that they confirmed his appointment quickly and unanimously; not simply because the public and the press on every side have approved the appointment; they are also proud because they believe firmly that he is able to meet the responsibilities of his office and to use wisely the opportunities to render high service to the nation in these confusing and tumultuous days.

"It was my good fortune to know Harold Burton for four years as an undergraduate. In those student days he gave promise of his future success. From the beginning he was a leader. And he maintained leadership because of outstanding mental and physical ability and by diligent work. . . Winner of the Goodwin French prize and the Smyth Mathematical prize, for four years an editor of the Orient, Editor in Chief of the Bugle, undergraduate assistant in History, active in debating, dramatics and the Christian Association, senior president of his class, member of Phi Beta Kappa, varsity letter man in track and football—his student interests and accomplishments were many and varied.

"Memory today brings to me many pictures of Burton at Bowdoin; a quiet, keen-eyed, thoughtful lad in freshman English—saying little, perhaps, but saying that well, clearly and forcibly and letting nothing around him escape his ear or his eye; a junior declaiming in Memorial Hall, vigorously denouncing the evils of race track gambling; a senior in the Church on the Hill warning a Commencement audience of the dangers of socialism on the one hand and of capitalistic monopolies on the other. But, like it or not, most vividly of all do I see him in football togs on the gridiron at Whittier Field. Not tall, not large, of medium height but firmly built, quickly glancing here and there, imperiously shouting signals and directing the play into which he plunges with all the force, aggressiveness, skill and strategy that he can command.

"And to me all this is but as cause and effect—part and parcel of what he has since achieved. Joy in physical activity; willingness to work hard and long and effectively; honest mindedness; independent and, if need be, aggressive thinking; courage to stand for what he believes is right—even in the face of great odds; Christian kindness; hatred of injustice; these are some of the qualities of mind and heart that he revealed or developed in college. And these are the inner forces that have guided his thought and motivated his living since he graduated from the college and went out into a larger and less sequestered world. Went out to study law at Harvard; to practice law in Utah; to fight in France during the First World War and to fight so bravely that he was cited by General Pershing and awarded the Croix de Guerre; went out to be Director of Law in Cleveland and later to serve as Mayor of that great city; and then, in these last tremendous years, to wield a powerful influence in the United States Senate in moulding the policies of this great nation—helping to win the war, helping to win the peace. And always the same man, moved by the same high motives, trusting in and resting down hard upon the same unshakable principles of life.

"Elected Mayor of Cleveland with a mandate to put the city in order, Harold Burton was opposed by powerful political machines and large corporate interests but he proved equal to the task. The people soon discovered that they had an honest mayor. It was said of him that he had 'a rock-ribbed New England conscience, stiff geared and in good working order.' He was mayor nearly six years and at each election his majority increased. Evidently the people of Cleveland liked a little New England conscience mixed with their politics. For Burton had been showing 'the mettle of his pasture'.

"This is the kind of man whom President Truman has now chosen to mete out justice in the highest court of the nation. Justice Burton remarked jocosely that he would choose for his seat one of the chairs that had a hard back that he might not go to sleep. We need not worry. At least one member of the court will have his eyes open; he will not nod. I submit that, as long as we have law makers and justices like Harold Burton, American Democracy is safe."

Night Must Not Fall

Harold C. Dickerman '36 Recites Some Thrills of His Work With The Seeing Eye

THE Seeing Eye as we know it today is the outgrowth of an experiment conducted in Switzerland on the breeding and intelligence of working dogs. Guide work, which originated in Germany late in the 19th century, was only part of the original work, but, largely because of the persistence of a blind young American, Morris Frank, who obtained his first dog in Switzerland, The Seeing Eye came to the United States. Thus, in 1929, was started this philanthropic organization, its headquarters first in Nashville, now in a converted country estate on the outskirts of Morristown, New Jersey, where is begun the miracle of teaching a man to use a new set of eyes.

The school is philanthropic in the sense that it is supported by the public; but in order to promote self-respect and to preserve the essential integrity of man, a carefully built-up policy has been established under which each student, regardless of personal estate, is required to pay a nominal sum for the privilege of using a guide-dog.

After careful selection, blind students both male and female arrive from different parts of the country, and are shown about the house and grounds. From this time on they are left to manage themselves; specifically, the student is treated like any sighted person laboring under a particular handicap. The candidate passes his first few days in studying his new environment and in learning the elements of his new work. At the same time, he in turn is carefully scrutinized with a view to determining which dog will best complement his physical and psychic personality. The dogs—mainly German shepherds—have already completed an intensive three-months course under an instructor and are now ready for the real test. Selection of dog for master is often a problem since dogs, like men, run the gamut of physical and temperamental characteristics. Soon the magic name is spoken; a handful of raw meat is offered; there is a rush of fur and a nuzzling wet tongue; and the longed-for introduction is over—a rarely equalled emotional situation.

From this time on the pair remain together night and day, and the task of transforming dog into eyes for the sightless is started. This is achieved through the use of a U-shaped harness on the dog, held in the master's left hand, and employed to transmit changes of speed and direction from dog to man. The average blind person is quite capable of developing an adequate picture of his community, and his guide brings him to his destination in response to the spoken commands "forward," "right," and "left." The dog stops at curbs, slows up for passing traffic, and halts for obstructions impeding forward progress, leading his master safely to his objective.

Simple as this sounds, it is the outcome of hours of devotion to painstaking details, all of which blend to produce the harmonious team. While the adjustment of two living variables is difficult in itself, this is but a part of the job. The candidates often have gravitated into such bad habits as faulty coordination, improper methods of walking, poor posture and flabby muscles. All of these must be improved to some extent at least, since their correction facilitates the work of the dog, which must compensate for all shortcomings of the master in order to make possible a successful unit. Flabby muscles make aches, pains, and "shin-splints" the order of the day during the vigorous instruction period. Thus beside training his dogs the instructor takes on the additional task of conditioning his students.

Shortly after work in town has commenced, the students are informed that they are now to cover the route alone. This first "solo" trip consists of a relatively simple combination of streets with which the units have familiarized themselves in their work. The natural blundering of the partially trained, semi-confident blind student with his dog on this first solo trip makes this experience a particularly hair-raising one both for student and for instructor, who checks every move closely, making trigger-quick decisions. The hard day over, students are assembled for a general conference on the usual problems of the day, at the conclusion of which they are electrified by the reminder that each has just negotiated quickly and without outside assistance a trip, which, one short week before, had been physically impossible. This is the psychological "shot in the arm" which eases the grind of the hard weeks ahead.

While the physical aspect is essential, our greatest value to the blind is on the spiritual side, rehabilitation. Many students come here with their objective the obtaining of a guide dog, yet with an inner skepticism which must be overcome—a wondering doubt that mere dog can do such a job. Therefore, throughout the training period, despite incessant drilling on the finer points, the building of morale must be kept uppermost. The observant instructor is on the alert to the slightest drop in spirit, frequently not apparent in the student, but in the reaction of sensitive dog to shades of voice; for the work of the new dog is not mechanical, but entirely dependent on the enthusiasm exhibited in the master's commands. In such cases an evening spent in informal discussion about the team's problems and about future plans generally works wonders, and cements mutual good-will between staff and student.

If there is one trait more than another typical of our blind students, it is a common desire to regain equality with sighted people; and back of all the hard work, criticism, cajolery, and play, this is kept in sight as our aim. That a new student, trying to find his way, is allowed to get lost in our spacious building may appear cruel to an onlooker. Yet, in his finally extricating himself from an awkward position on his own initiative, without assistance—in this and kindred situations, lies the key to The Seeing Eye's methods. When he can once more learn to do things alone, then he is able to laugh at his former muddling. Out of it all comes a wholesome self-reliance; he has won complete freedom of motion to go where he wishes and do a man's job. A rare sense of humor is developed by the hard work and the new urge for living.

Such is the humor of our blinded Vice President, Mr. Frank, who one day chanced to be eating lunch in a crowded restaurant. A garrulous old lady nearby had noted the ease with which he and "Buddy" negotiated the narrow aisles between crowded tables and was moved to investigate further. Approaching his table, she said archly, "Young man, your eyes look perfectly all right to me." "Heck, lady," was the reply, "They ought to. I paid ten dollars apiece for them."

This is the work of The Seeing Eye, where the entire staff, from executive to domestic, is united in one aim—the adjustment of dog to the blinded man and the resultant conquest over his handicap. Volumes can be written, and one actually has been published: Dogs Against Darkness, by Dickson Hartwell. I hope that in the brief space allotted however, I have succeeded in presenting an adequate picture of a most soul-satisfying job.

Alumni Day

"BUT a little while and the frost will be on the pumpkin; the skunk will roam the fields of corn-stubble unmolested; the air will be filled with leaves and pigskins; and the freshman will bloom on the campus again."

So wrote a Bowdoin boy of yesterday to a classmate he was shortly to see in Brunswick. "But a little while" and he would be back to experience that thrill of autumn thrills—the giving and taking of boisterous greetings as a gang of college boys meet again after the long summer away from Bowdoin.

Frosts had undoubtedly touched a few pumpkins when, on October 15, 1945, about two hundred one-time Bowdoin undergraduates returned to a peacetime campus to resume interrupted studies. Not a few had been away for years instead of weeks. The doings of domestic skunks bothered nobody for many of those returning boys had but lately concluded the utter undoing of a horde of the European and Pacific species. Falling leaves there were, and plenty, and the sweetly remembered smoke from burning piles was being breathed once more. There were freshmen, too,—more than a hundred of them—all over the place. One ingredient, however, was missing from the formula—pigskins. And there just had to be pigskins.

So the Faculty was not surprised when a student petition appeared asking that the summer decision be changed and that sanction be given to an informal football team to play two informal games with Colby. Fully aware that some fifty aspirants were already in togs and working out on Pickard Field, the Faculty promptly and unanimously acquiesced.

Candidates and equipment were in supply but what to do for coaches and trainers? Two autumn leaves which bothered were those issued to Adam and Dinny—leaves of absence. And Doc Demi Johnson was devoting most of his spare time to treating patients in almost doctorless Brunswick. Furthermore, Mal Morrell had no appropriation for football. But he did have some ideas. He let it be known that Bowdoin needed some help to give three hundred boys what they wanted. In a matter of hours that help came—and in abundance.

Neil Mahoney shifted his schedule and arranged to take over the conditioning job. Demi put out a sign warning his patients that they must not need a physician while the Bowdoin football team was scrimmaging. Ed Beezer Coombs, former star leather lugger and more recently Leatherneck lieutenant, was on terminal leave at Boothbay. He agreed to head a coaching staff. Sgt. Frank Sebastianski, all-Maine guard of prewar days, couldn't think of a more enjoyable way to spend his Army furlough than to hitch hike from Portland to teach the line candidates. Navy Lieutenant Clark Cy Young, one of Adam's potent pass receivers, found himself stationed at the Brunswick Naval Air Station, on his way out of service and not too strictly tied to duty. He took on the ends. Lt. George Dinny Shay USNR was also stationed at the Base and, conveniently enough, he admitted he could find some time to give these volunteer coaches some guidance. With Lt. Comdr. Geof Stanwood, Naval Intelligence Officer, ready and willing to perform unheard of feats of piloting and ferrying and to contribute to the overall strategy, Bowdoin had a working coaching staff. As frequently as trips to Brunswick could be sandwiched into job-hunting programs, erstwhile Bowdoin scabbards Hank Benito Bonzagni and Jimmie Dolan, more recently combat fliers for the Navy and the Army respectively, dropped in to reveal their famed skill and technique in the matters of the disappearing football and the swivel hip. The game was but two weeks away but Bowdoin once more had a football team in the making. Pigskins were back on the campus.

But undergraduates were not the only Bowdoin men interested. Press reports of football activity in Brunswick brought a flood of alumni requests for tickets and demands for a homecoming. Those alumni had too long hungered for an excuse to gather at Bowdoin. So, forthwith, a self-appointed committee consisting of Athletic Director Morrell, Bursar McIntire, Union Manager Lancaster and Alumni Secretary Marsh pooled their ideas with the experience of Bill Morgan at the Gym Office and placed before President Sills a program for an informal Alumni Day. The President gave his blessing and for three hectic days printing press, mimeograph and addressograph were busy. So, too, were office staffs and Post Office workers.

Alumni response was immediate and, on Saturday, November 3, Bowdoin men and their families from near and distant points flocked to Brunswick to attend the first Alumni Day since 1942. Fog and an overcast sky doubtless discouraged some, but hundreds, young and not-so-young, came. Those who could maneuver an early departure smacked their lips over a delicious lobster stew ("all you can eat") at the Alumni Luncheon in the Gym. They applauded Council President Dick Chapman and Dean Nixon for the shortest and most enjoyed speaking program on record. On their way to the game, they greeted President Sills, who, travelling all night from Washington, arrived in time to grab a hasty luncheon and get to the grandstand. They joined the nearly 3000 at Whittier Field and were thrilled to be there. Seldom had they witnessed more undergraduate spirit or heard better cheering—some of the best of which emanated from the far-side stands packed with a gay gang of Colby girls who were in Brunswick for the dance as well as the game.

As for the game—it was exciting—a good game to watch—the final score a tie at 7 to 7. Bowdoin's young and inexperienced players gave an altogether satisfactory account of themselves. Their coaches had imparted much in a short time. Bowdoin was well represented on Whittier Field and Bowdoin alumni went home in the rain glad that they had come.

In their customary gracious fashion, President and Mrs. Sills entertained at tea after the game. The students and their guests from Colby and other nearby feminine student groups closed the day with a Gym dance.

The teams, the game and the day were "informal." But they were enjoyed. Frequent alumni comment was that coming "had given a much needed lift." The first Alumni Day in three long and weary years was but the forerunner of more "real" Days to come.

On Saturday, November 10, the return informal game was played at Waterville. Unable to make consistent progress against Colby's heavier and more experienced line, Bowdoin was on the short end of a 13 to 6 score. Bowdoin missed its best chance to tie when a most untimely offside nullified a brilliant 70-yard touchdown run.

The two game schedule produced no Bowdoin victory but it was good for the College. Much promising material is in sight for another year. To all the members of the squad, warm praise for a job well done, to those volunteer, unpaid coaches, the hearty thanks of every Bowdoin man.

October Graduation

The Address of President Sills A Warning Against Complacency

ONCE again on October 6, the Chapel was the scene of an interim graduation. Of the sixteen degrees awarded, all but seven were given in absentia, that to William M. Muir '44, who was killed on Okinawa, being granted posthumously. Two of the seven present were in uniform. Six degrees were presented cum laude and four graduates received Honors in subjects.

Members of the Executive Committee of the Boards, the Faculty, and the degree candidates formed the academic parade from Hubbard Hall. They were marshaled by Professor Kendrick in place of Professor Herbert W. Hartman, Jr., who had served in that capacity for all Bowdoin's war-time graduations. Professor Tillotson at the organ played the processional and later, with Mrs. Burnett, cello, and Dr. John Russel, violin, played the andante movement from Mendelssohn's D Minor Trio. Following prayer by Dr. Ashby, President Sills, assisted by Clement F. Robinson '03, President of the Board of Overseers, awarded the degrees according to the ancient Latin formula so familiar to all Bowdoin men, and delivered a brief address, a sobering message of such timely value that it is being here reproduced. After the exercises a luncheon for the graduates, their families, and the Faculty was held at the Moulton Union.

"As the college, like the rest of the country, is emerging from war, we are all increasingly aware that the problems now confronting us are as complex and difficult as those we met and mastered in winning the victory, and with this important difference, it is perhaps harder to maintain unity of thought and effort and to put aside selfish aims than it was during the combat. Young men completing their college course this fall must feel bewildered indeed. They may accept the challenge of the morrow with its rays of hope, but in the present they can see little except confusion.

"As we look back upon the elation that swept over so many of us when the San Francisco Conference was ended, and when there were such great expectations from the new Charter of the United Nations, we need a stout heart and unconquerable faith as we get reports of nations, including our own, still seeking their own interests, apparently without regard for the good of the whole. The one world for which so many fought and for which so many others dreamed, is divided again into many segments and we seem still very far away from any real international cooperation. At home industrial unrest is rife from one end of the country to the other; labor union leaders, wrapt up in taking advantage of the moment, seem utterly incapable of making any allowance for the public good.

"In a day when strikes and lock-outs should be as antiquated as duelling and as outgrown as the do-do, there are more strikes than ever. Many unions seem to be fighting, not so much employers and industry, as the public itself. Indeed, when a union organizes itself on a national industry basis and secures a monopoly of bargaining for labor, it is forgetting that it must contend, not merely with industry, but with the public.

"For example, John Jones, living in the village of Three Corners, and looking forward to buying a new car, is not going to be patient with the labor movement that postpones that happy dream for many months. A mother waiting for weeks to greet her son returning from overseas is not likely to examine too critically the reasons for a strike in the oil industry; all she knows is that her son will not be with her for a long time because of the shortage of fuel oil caused by a strike. And when one turns to the international field, again there seems little hope of good relations, and diplomats seem to be playing the same old game, and there is little evidence on the part of any nation, great or small, of the surrender of even a tiny bit of sovereignty.

"What in the face of a world 'in a state of shatters,' of a country confronted with continual unrest, should be the attitude of young college graduates? In the first place, they should be careful to preserve a balance between fatuous optimism and despairing pessimism. Somehow or other the world will go on; it will muddle through. There is reason to believe that the failure of the council of foreign ministers in London may perhaps show the necessity of referring more and more important issues connected with the peace to the security council of the United Nations, and the disappointment that so many feel over the lack of success of the recent conference may in reality lead to a strengthening of the Charter.

"Certainly we should not shrink back to a situation where isolation will play the dominating role. Internally the labor movement will require much more wisdom on the part of its leaders than has lately been displayed. Before long such leaders will undoubtedly see that they cannot gain their ends without the strong support of popular opinion. Here again, there may be a grave danger of reverting to reactionary measures. The American people have shown that they believe in collective bargaining, that they believe in many of the gains made by labor in the past few decades; but they will not stand for abuses, nor for policies that leave the public out of consideration.

"Above all, young college graduates must show that they will not compromise with principle for immediate gain, nor should they adopt a policy of appeasement. The true liberal believes in following out those principles that make for liberty, whether in international, in national, or individual cases; but he also knows that he cannot gain liberty for himself at the expense of others. And if in college, a man has learned the real lesson of cooperation,—in the words of President Hyde, 'to lose one's self in generous enthusiasm and cooperate with others for common ends,'—he will illustrate in himself those very principles which are so vital for the nation and for the world."

NOW that wartime printing and publishing restrictions have been eased the long awaited General Catalogue of the College is to be prepared and issued. The President has appointed a committee consisting of John W. Frost, Chairman and Fred R. Lord from the Board of Overseers with Professor Herbert R. Brown, Librarian Kenneth J. Boyer and Seward J. Marsh from the college staff to proceed with publication. As the catalogue is to be a collection of biographical data concerning all Bowdoin men, there is vast amount of work facing the committee. Funds contributed for the purpose are available and the committee is now considering the scope, makeup and cost of the work. One meeting has already been held and there is hope that actual work may be started soon. All are desirous that the publication be made at the earliest possible date.

Operation Pluto

Now It Can Be Told What One Bowdoin Man Did

COL. A. KEITH EATON '15

PROMINENT in the sequence of "Now It Can Be Told" items appearing in the newspapers and magazines of the country is one of particular interest to Bowdoin men. It is the story of "Operation Pluto," graphically related in the summer issue of the Shell News, of which Mr. Philip Wallach is the editor. The ALUMNUS acknowledges with gratitude Mr. Wallach's permission to quote from his article and the picture of Col. A. Keith Eaton, Bowdoin '15, who was a key man in the successful and vitally important war undertaking known as "Operation Pluto."

How to get from bombed England to Allied fighting forces in France and Germany an adequate supply of oil and gasoline was a problem which puzzled the high command. A casual remark made during a flame thrower demonstration in April, 1942, "started a chain of circumstances in an action which hastened victory." British Minister of Petroleum Warfare, Geoffrey Lloyd, and Lord Mountbatten were discussing the invasion of France, which, although months, perhaps years, away, was then in the making. In response to the minister's casual inquiry as to whether further petroleum activity could assist in the invasion, Lord Mountbatten quite as casually queried, "Can you lay an oil pipeline across the channel?"

"A pipeline across the channel! Those continually angry waters presented a challenge; how could a line be laid, how could working men be protected? The first reaction of the engineering experts was an emphatic 'No!' But this was a possibility that captured the imagination, and while it might ordinarily have been summarily dismissed from further consideration, it was carefully studied and debated. This was a problem for the petroleum industry and Lloyd called in experts from several companies."

Weeks and months of experiment followed. Lines of various designs and sizes were made and tried. But the incessant bombing of Britain was an obstacle which could not be overcome—quantity manufacture in Britain was impossible. American assistance was sought. The Army Engineers were asked to produce—and quickly—the needed pipe. Forwarded to the Supply Division, the request fell into the hands of the Chief, Col. A. Keith Eaton, an oil man on leave from his position as manager of Railroad Sales in the New York Office of the Shell Oil Company. Col. Eaton was ready; he tackled the job at once. How he marshaled the abilities of American producers; built in April, 1944, a special government plant; turned out the first section of flexible pipe in three months and completed the manufacture on September 16—is the story of a Bowdoin man's part in "Operation Pluto," a war maneuver of paramount importance in the defeat of Germany.

More than 120 million gallons of gasoline were pumped under the channel to the Allied armies. As those armies advanced the lines, and the oil, followed—even as far as Frankfurt, Germany. What that supply meant to General Patton's armored drive and to all the Allied mechanized forces may be easily understood. "Operation Pluto" was a complete success. Our unstinted praise and thanks go to a group of men who boldly conceived and executed an "impossible idea." Col. A. Keith Eaton, Bowdoin '15 was one of those men.

On The Campus

Class of 1949

THE fall trimester opened on October 15, and registration is still going on as this is written. At the moment there are 325 students in college. Of these 116 are new members of the Class of 1949. With the 65 who entered in June, that class now has a membership of 181. Four special students and fifteen transfers are among the new men entering. Service veterans now number 97 of whom 34 are new freshmen.

Massachusetts heads the geographical distribution of freshmen with 40; Maine is second with 34 and New York third with 14. Connecticut sends 7, New Jersey 5, Rhode Island 4, New Hampshire and Pennsylvania each 3. Two come from the District of Columbia and one each from Indiana, Missouri, Ohio and Sweden. Of the transfer students, seven are from Maine, two each from Massachusetts, New York and District of Columbia and one each from Mexico and Norway.

The fourteen Bowdoin sons entering and their Bowdoin fathers are Leon T. Buker (Errol L. Buker '27), David Crowell (Cedric R. Crowell '13), M. Roberts Grover, Jr. (Myron R. Grover '19), William N. Irving (Laurence Irving '16), John H. Littlefield (Harold G. Littlefield '26), George S. Nevens, Jr., (Dr. George S. Nevens '18), Philip L. Powers (Walter A. Powers '06), John K. Scates (Karl D. Scates '08), Lester B. Shackford, Jr. (Lester B. Shackford '13), Emery W. Stevens (Clyde E. Stevens '19), George R. Swift (Raymond W. Swift '17), Jared T. Weatherill (Robert T. Weatherill '14), James G. Woodbury (Roliston G. Woodbury '22), Maynard R. Young, Jr. (Maynard R. Young '22). Woodbury enjoys the further distinction of being also a Bowdoin grandson.

Evidence continues to be offered that some admitted mistakes were made when boys were choosing colleges some twenty years ago. We glean from statements made by entering freshmen that their fathers attended no less than 32 colleges other than Bowdoin. Six of those fathers strayed to Harvard, four to the University of Maine, three to Boston University and M.I.T. and two to Cornell, Worcester Tech and Tufts. The list embraces most of the New England institutions, Columbia, Pennsylvania and Penn State, such Universities as Michigan, Illinois, Chicago, Northwestern, Utah, Western Reserve and Oregon State. Sons were not too fluent with parental collegiate history but we are pleased that Bowdoin is now the selection of so many alumni of other good schools. Smith, Vassar, Bryn Mawr, Columbia, Maine and Wheaton appear most often in the collegiate affiliations of freshman mothers, but, here too, the range is wide. That is also gratifying to record.

Robert W. Biggar of Saco is a State of Maine Scholar and Colin T. Lancaster of Wales, Mass., enters under the John Johnston Scholarship. The following ten freshmen are Alumni Fund Scholars: Robert A. Atwood of Brunswick, Paul L. Bishop of Bowdoinham, Phillip W. Estes of North Leeds, Edward Goon of Portland, Emil G. Hahnel of Lewiston, Lee P. Jackson of South Portland, Johnson Poor of Ferguson, Missouri, Leonal J. Pratt of North Conway, N. H., Joseph J. Schmuck of Lynn, Mass., and Luigi D'Alessio of Brunswick.

Bowdoin On The Air

AFTER a lapse of two months Bowdoin-on-the-Air returned to station WGAN on Wednesday, October 3, at four forty-five. Vin Sotak '49 announced as Professor Tillotson accompanied Ensign Herbert Cabral of the Bowdoin Pre-Radar School in a program of classical songs. Mr. Tillotson's new arrangement of E. A. Robinson's Twilight Song which he first set to music for the Sesquicentennial was heard for the first time on the program. Three weeks later Professor Emeritus Wilmot B. Mitchell talked on the appointment of Senator Harold Hitz Burton '09 to the United States Supreme Court. Stan Weinstein '47 announced. Professor Robert P. T. Coffin read from his poetry on October 24. He was introduced by Vin Sotak '49. Programs planned include a piano recital by Richard L. Chittim '41 on November 14, the Meddiebempsters on December 5, and a special half-hour program of Christmas Carols by the Bowdoin College Choir on December 19 beginning at three thirty in the afternoon.

Athletics

WE wish to express our thanks to Ed Coombs, Frank Sabasteanski, Clark Young, Hank Bonzagni, and Jim Dolan for their work with the football team. They formed a volunteer coaching staff and helped develop a good team. None of these men expect to go into the coaching field as a life work. It is a tribute to the College and to Adam Walsh and Dinny Shay that these young returned service men were willing, and apparently glad, to give so much time to this work. It is a tribute to Adam and Dinny that they had the ability to step in and do such a good job. Bowdoin could certainly have had a far larger volunteer staff, if it had been needed. No one refused to come back and help.

The football games with Colby were surprisingly good, in view of the short period of preparation. None of the Bowdoin candidates had ever played football for Bowdoin before, and none of the coaches even knew any one of the candidates until the first day of practice. Colby was certainly a stronger and more powerful team, and yet in two games they scored only once more. We were indeed proud of the manner in which the boys played and continued to try to win up to the last play of each game. The games were close and could have been won by either team with a break here or there. Colby had a fairly big team made up largely of returned service men who tackled as hard as any Colby team in recent years.

Six games of football have been arranged for next fall. We play Mass State, Amherst, Williams, Colby, Bates and Maine in that order. In the fall of 1947 Wesleyan will take its regular date on the schedule, replacing Mass State. It is possible that by 1947 we can again play seven games, in which case, the Tufts game will be played as the first game of the season. It is not possible to play seven games in 1946 because final examinations for the summer trimester are held during the week September 22-28. Saturday, September 28, 1946, would normally be the date for the Tufts game.

Candidates for the track, swimming and basketball teams have reported to Coaches Magee, Miller and Mahoney, and we are looking forward to fairly good teams in all three of these winter sports. This year the competition will be more with other colleges and less with preparatory and high school teams. There will be a few more varsity contests in each sport, and a few J.V. games. The rifle club is active again and plans to have competition this winter.

There is a great deal of student interest in hockey, but it doesn't seem at present that we can possibly have a team. The old rink is in bad condition, and the cost of repairs and maintenance would be very high in proportion to the returns in actual playing day use. There is no better game than hockey, but in Brunswick we need a covered rink.

In addition to the intercollegiate program, there will be the usual intramural basketball competition, and the formal calisthenics and swimming classes.

Dinny Shay expects to be discharged from the Navy this month and to report for duty at the College soon.

Music

THE larger student enrolment is making possible activities of the department comparable to a near normal year. The Choir continues with renewed vigor and hopes are high that a Glee Club of fifty voices may be ready for concerts in the winter and spring. The college band has been reorganized and a spring concert is a definite possibility. The Meddiebempsters, the college double quartet are busy rehearsing and student recitals in the Union are again regular Sunday afternoon features.

A joint concert with the Waynflete School Glee Club is on the calendar for the Christmas holidays.

ADAM WALSH WAS GREETED BY A GROUP OF NEW ENGLAND AND BOWDOIN FRIENDS WHEN HIS CLEVELAND RAMS RECENTLY BEAT THE GIANTS IN NEW YORK. SHOWN WITH HIM HERE ARE THREE ALUMNI WHO PERFORMED FOR ADAM AT BOWDOIN—NELS COREY, JOHNNY CARTLAND AND BUNNY BASS.

phony series of Pop Concerts. This special Bowdoin concert, in which Professor Tillotson and the Glee Club will appear with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is scheduled for the latter part of May, 1946. A committee of the Bowdoin Club of Boston, under the vigorous leadership of James F. Claverie '10 is now making plans. Students and alumni within the New England area welcome this recognition of Bowdoin's Department of Music and are certain to make the affair a sellout.

Reunions

SEVERAL classes have plans underway for their part in the Victory Commencement in June 1946. The thirty year class, 1916, is to make the Field House its headquarters and accommodations for families are being sought. The Class of 1936 will take over Maine Hall for their Tenth. Early reports indicate an expected attendance of about one hundred members. George Monel and Howard Dana are making preliminary arrangements. Alexander Standish heads the reunion committee of 1921, the 25-year class. The committee is to meet on the campus on December 1 to select headquarters and plan for their outing. With some classes which were prevented by the war from holding their scheduled reunions now planning gatherings, it begins to appear that Commencement on Friday and Saturday, June 7 and 8 is likely to tax campus facilities.

ON Tuesday, October 30, over one hundred Maine and New England members of the Newcomen Society of England met at the Lafayette Hotel in Portland to do honor to Bowdoin College and to President Sills. Dr. William S. Newell H'40, Chairman of the Maine Newcomen Committee, presided, and presented Dean Nixon, who introduced President Sills. Bowdoin's first president, Dr. Joseph McKeen, and the Bowdoin of his time were the subjects of President Sills' address. Of particular interest to alumni is the fact that the report of this meeting, including a transcription of the President's scholarly and absorbingly interesting talk, is to be mailed to the more than 5,000 members of the Newcomen Society in this country and Canada.

On Monday evening, February 25, in the Moulton Union, after the initiation, the Bowdoin chapter of Phi Beta Kappa will hold a dinner to honor those members of the faculty who have returned from military or governmental service.

Following the dinner, Professor Boyd W. Bartlett '17, now of the U. S. Military Academy, will give an address in the lounge of the union. This part of the exercises will be opened to the public.

James Bowdoin Day

ON Wednesday, October 31, faculty and student body gathered in Memorial Hall to recognize those undergraduates whose curricular work had justified their designation as James Bowdoin Scholars. Thirty-one were so honored but only twenty were on campus and able to attend.

In colorful academic garb and led by the newly reorganized college band, the Faculty and the guest speakers paraded from Hubbard Hall. The Chapel Choir, conducted by Professor Tillotson, sang two numbers; the Right Reverend Monsignor George Pierce Johnson, Vicar General of the Diocese of Portland, gave the invocation; President Sills announced the awards and presented the James Bowdoin Scholars to the applauding college community assembled; Richard Earle Eskilson '45 responded for the recipients of awards.

The James Bowdoin Day address was delivered by President Julius Seelye Bixler of Colby College. His subject, Danger Signs for the Scholar, was handled in scholarly fashion and presented in a manner which held the attentive interest of his hearers.

Debating

BOWDOIN will open its post-war debating with a contest against Bates College at Lewiston around December 1. This debate will be the closing feature of a debating clinic held annually by Bates for secondary schools. Bowdoin has also made tentative arrangements with M.I.T. for a dual debate in the spring. During the year the Bradbury and Achorn Prize Debates will be renewed.

WHEN the Naval Pre-radar School closed on September 30, Bowdoin's student population became entirely civilian for the first time in over four years. Opening in June 1941, six months before Pearl Harbor, the school has been under the continuous command and direction of Comdr. (soon again to be Professor) Noel C. Little '17. The College has received frequent official recognition and commendation for the work accomplished in this important contribution to the war effort and during the closing months of the war all the Navy's pre-radar training was concentrated at Bowdoin. If the statements of many of the more than 2000 young officers who have studied here may be relied upon the College is richer by the friendship of many who had never before been aware of Maine and Bowdoin.

Brunswick, Maine. May 20, 1824. Before a small but appreciative audience members of the Junior and Senior classes of Bowdoin College read parts in the Spring Exhibition held here this evening. The Reverend William Allen, D.D., President of the College, presided and introduced each speaker. The faculty was well represented by Parker Cleaveland, Samuel P. Newman, and Alpheus S. Packard. The Hon. Stephen Longfellow, a member of the Board of Trustees, had driven out from Portland and sat with his two sons Stephen and Henry W. A young man from Salem, Mass., Nathaniel Hathorne, was the fourth member of the party. All three of the young men are members of the Junior Class.

Each of the fifteen participants performed in a manner that reflected great credit to the honor of the College. The topics chosen for presentation met a ready response from the audience. "The Civilization of the American Indians" by Harrison Allen, "The Relation of Heathen Philosophy to Christianity" by Calvin Stow, and the oration in Latin "De Seculo Augusti" by Franklin Pierce were applauded with real enthusiasm. But your reporter liked best the dissertation on "Satirical Compositions" by Jonathan Cilley from which the following sentences are printed verbatim:

The object, which satirical writings profess to have in view, is reformation of manners. To accomplish this end it assumes the liberty of boldly and publicly censuring and ridiculing the prevailing vices and follies of the age. For one example of the powerful and salutary influence of this species of writing we might refer to the sixteenth century, when the humor and satire of one writer accomplished what the combined efforts of law, force, and religion had endeavoured in vain to effect. "The Don Quixote of Cervantes," says an ancient writer, "may be regarded as a most useful performance, which brought about an entire revolution in the manners and literature of Europe. And the publication of this work may be regarded as an important era in the history of mankind." It was satire, which sealed a final doom to all the wild dreams and phantastical extravagances of chivalry and knight-errantry. And may we not hope, that at no very distant period, a Cervantes may arise in our own country, who, in a similar manner, consigning to undying ridicule and contempt the impious, but fashionable practice of modern dueling, shall acquire an imperishable fame, and be hailed as the benefactor and reformer of his age?

Washington, D. C. February 24, 1838.

Early this afternoon in a clearing near the Anacosta bridge on the road to Marlborough, Maryland, Hon. Jonathan Cilley, a Representative to the Congress from the State of Maine, was shot and killed while engaged in a duel with Hon. William J. Graves, a Representative from Kentucky. The weapons were rifles at 80 yards and Mr. Cilley fell mortally wounded after the third exchange of shots. Mr. Cilley's death is a great loss to his native State and to the nation for he showed great promise of becoming an outstanding statesman. While all parties connected with the fatal encounter have refused to talk, it is rumored that the deplorable affair commenced with scarcely a shadow of an excuse and was continued from personal malice and the desire of revenge. It is understood that the House of Representatives is promptly to appoint a committee to investigate the entire affair.

These two clippings, like some of the best radio programs, are "by electrical transcription",—or shall we say fashioned into whole cloth from bits of truth? The mention in the last issue of the ALUMNUS of Hawthorne's friendship for Cilley and of Cilley's duel inspired a friend of the ALUMNUS to send in the clippings.

Graves was a Kentucky fire-eater, the leader of a group of southern Congressmen who were annoyed by the brilliant Cilley. A pretext to pick him off was readily found. On February 12, 1838, a southern representative had asked for an investigating committee as to charges made in a New York paper by an anonymous writer whose high standing was vouched for by the editor of the paper. Cilley said he did not think the charges gained any credit by being approved by an editor who had attacked a federal institution (The United States Bank) and then changed to its support when it made $52,000 available to him. In this statement Cilley was referring to facts which had been brought out in a previous congressional investigation.

Backward

The offended editor sent a note to Cilley by the hand of Graves demanding an explanation. Cilley, expressing high regard for Graves and disavowing any knowledge of the editor except what was derived from the public records, refused to receive the note, saying firmly but courteously that he did not want to enter into any controversy with the editor. Graves took this as a reflection on his own honor.

Meeting at a selected spot in Maryland, each with a second, two friends and a surgeon, one shot was exchanged without result, Cilley shooting into the ground a few paces away. Cilley's rifle was half the calibre of Graves' and Cilley stood on a knoll in a field while Graves stood against the shadow of a grove.

The friends then went through the motions of trying to accommodate the controversy. Cilley again stated his respect for Graves, his lack of knowledge as to the editor's character, and his unwillingness to dispute with him. This failed to satisfy Graves, of course, so second shots were exchanged without result. Graves shouted several times: "I must have another shot," and his friends insisted that the duel must go on unless Cilley should either disavow any criticism of the editor or claim his constitutional (as distinguished from his personal) privilege to refuse to be called to account for statements made in debate.

Cilley declined to change his position, and on the third exchange of shots, Cilley was shot through the body, dying at once.

All this, shocking as it is to our ideas, was not inconsistent with the code of honor then prevalent among certain groups in some parts of the country. But a scandal developed which had much to do with driving out dueling,—in fact the Cilley-Graves duel had but one political successor, and with the Civil War dueling disappeared. C.F.R.

Alumni Associations And Clubs

BOSTON

The fall meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Boston will be held at the Hotel Statler, on Pearl Harbor Day, December 7. Dean Nixon and the Alumni Secretary will represent the College. Several Bowdoin veterans will also speak, among them Major Everett Pope '41, holder of the Congressional Medal of Honor. Plans for the Bowdoin Night at the Boston Symphony Pops, sometime in May, will be discussed. President Noel W. Deering '25 hopes that all Bowdoin men in the vicinity will join with the club in December to share the welcome to be given service men and to learn how New England alumni may cooperate to make the Bowdoin Pop Concert a sellout event.

LEWISTON

The fall meeting of the Androscoggin Association was held at the De Witt Hotel in Lewiston, Thursday, November 1. President William L. Haskell '33 conducted the business meeting and presented Stephen D. Trafton '28, who served as toastmaster. Professor Herbert R. Brown and the Alumni Secretary represented the College. Professor Brown reported on the unexpectedly large enrolment of about 325 including 100 veterans and told of the progress toward reconversion. He stated that, unlike many colleges, Bowdoin had no "postwar plan" as such. The current transitional period will call for many changes and Bowdoin is ready to make such of them as appear to be warranted. Furthermore, many educational ideas now being advanced elsewhere have been practiced at Bowdoin for years. There is to be emphasized a greater degree of flexibility in the curriculum and a broader approach to major fields of study. John T. Gould '31, publisher of the Lisbon Falls Enterprise and a writer of distinction gave an interesting address on an editor's work and his varied experiences in the newspaper and publicity fields. His statement of editorial policy and the reasons for it with an amusing recital of his personal experiences proved not only instructive but highly entertaining.

Officers for the ensuing year are: President, David V. Berman '23; Vice Presidents, E. Shepley Paul '19, Stephen D. Trafton '28, and Faunce Pendexter '37; Secretary and Treasurer, John M. Beale '35.

NEWARK

The Northern New Jersey Association held their fall dinner at Newark on Friday, November 16. President Alvah B. Stetson '15 introduced George W. Burpee '04, New York engineer and Overseer of the College, as the speaker of the evening. Business included election of the club's representative member of the Alumni Council. The secretary, Howard S. Hall '31 is anxious to hear from Bowdoin men who have recently come to New Jersey. His address is 151 Irving Avenue, South Orange, New Jersey.

PORTLAND

The SRO sign was out when the Bowdoin Club of Portland met in joint session with the Bowdoin Teachers Club at the Columbia Hotel on October 25. George O. Cummings '13 presided. With short and snappy introductions he presented the Governor, Horace A. Hildreth '25, President Sills, Associate Professor Athern P. Daggett '25, Athletic Director Malcolm E. Morrell '24, Alumni Secretary Seward J. Marsh '12 and Sgt. Frank Sebastianski '41. Proclaiming that he spoke only when he was eating on the house, the Governor confined his remarks to a brief word of greeting to his fellow alumni and club members. President Sills reported on the unexpectedly large registration at the College and the plans for aiding the nearly 100 returned veterans in the student body. Requesting alumni to encourage service men to avail themselves of the educational provisions of the G. I. Bill, the President asked also that these men be given understanding assistance in their approach to studies. While servicemen have demonstrated that they constitute no administrative problem, he said that virtually all of them express doubts about their ability to do good college work and that they need encouragement to start. The experience of the College is that, after a few weeks, the service men find themselves and are in need of nowhere near the aid and assistance that some college people had thought would be necessary. President Sills said that Bowdoin's peacetime problems, contrary to some opinions, would certainly be no less difficult than they had been during the war years; that little definite planning could be made until it was known what action the Congress would take on universal military service. There will be some reconversion at Bowdoin, both of student body and faculty. Instead of a lot of new courses, the College would stress new methods of teaching and new emphasis upon certain courses, particularly in the field of science and those courses which make for better living. Mr. Morrell described the eagerness with which the students were drilling for the two informal football games, paid tribute to the volunteer coaching staff and introduced one of them, Frank Sebastianski, who spoke of the fun he was having and predicted victories. Professor Daggett and the Alumni Secretary responded briefly urging all who could to come back for Alumni Day. The meeting adjourned early to permit the teachers present to attend the evening session of the Teachers' Conference.

PROVIDENCE

The Bowdoin Club of Rhode Island has lost all its officers to war service or business transfers. Dana M. Swan '29, a former president of the club, has enlisted the help of Craig S. Houston '20 and Henry C. Haskell '18 and is proceeding to round up members for a meeting in January. Dean Nixon has agreed to attend and speak. All Bowdoin men in the vicinity of Providence can help by sending their names and addresses to Dana M. Swan, 1310 Turks Head Building, Providence 3, R. I.

Bowdoin Men In The Service

Supplemental List

There have been reported to the ALUMNUS office records of 33 more Bowdoin men in the armed services, bringing the total service stars to 2488 in number. Five newly reported fatalities swells the number of Bowdoin's gold stars to 82. All reported as prisoners are now liberated. Seven Bowdoin men continue to be officially listed as missing. Alumni and their families can render real service by sending to the Alumni Office up-to-date information concerning the service status of Bowdoin men and their correct mail addresses.

Herbert Weidler Hartman

A Minute Adopted by the Bowdoin Faculty, October 23, 1945

AT a season of renewed vigor and high hopes, the College has suffered an irreparable loss in the premature death on October 2, 1945, of Herbert Weidler Hartman, Jr., Associate Professor of English.

Fresh from his undergraduate and graduate course at Yale, where his abilities had marked him out for future distinction even among an unusually brilliant literary group, Herbert Hartman came to Bowdoin in 1928 as Instructor in English. Very soon he proved himself so promising a scholar and so gifted a teacher that his tenure and advancement were assured. In 1930 he was made Assistant Professor, and in 1936 Associate Professor of English. Thus his entire teaching career has been spent in the service of the College, which as the years passed felt increasingly the influence of his intellectual vitality, his fineness, and his humanity. Several times he could have gone elsewhere, to posts of prominence; he preferred to remain at Bowdoin, to which he had become deeply attached, notwithstanding the occasional ironic raising of his eyebrows at our odd Yankee ways and his delightful mimicry of our Down East speech.

As a writer and scholar, Mr. Hartman has to his credit a number of very solid achievements. Of his biography of Hartley Coleridge (1931), the most readable and penetrating account of that unusual poet's son and minor poet, a reviewer said that it might "serve as an introduction to some of the most interesting personalities of the Romantic Movement." By several articles on Wordsworth and S. T. Coleridge, which appeared in the Publications of the Modern Language Association and the Review of English Studies, he made important contributions to the interpretation of those major Romantic poets. His article (P.M.L.A., 1931) on Hal's "favours" in Henry IV, Part I is hailed by the British scholar J. Dover Wilson as having effected "the recovery" of an action at an important juncture of the play "worthy of the occasion in a supreme degree." In an even more technically difficult department of literary scholarship—textual editing—Mr. Hartman demonstrated his proficiency by his definitive editions of Surrey's Fourth Boke of Virgill (1933) and of A Petite Pallace of Pettie his Pleasure (1938). In a different vein, his gay and wickedly clever book of undergraduate verse, Imperial Fiddlesticks, circulation of which in Brunswick he almost succeeded in suppressing, and a good deal of later poetry, equally finished but more mature and some of it poignantly moving, revealed a no less characteristic side of his rich and intense inner life. Whether in verse or prose, he wrote extremely well, always clearly and precisely yet with wit and grace, for he was a man of letters to his shapely fingertips. He loved, and he made others love the world of books; the literary life was to him an absorbing and exciting pursuit, which to the very end challenged the best in him. He left among his papers, well toward completion, a Calendar of English Literature on a new and interesting plan. Both this manuscript and some of his later verse may soon, it is hoped, be published.

The qualities just hinted at, all too inadequately, were what made him so superior as a teacher, especially in composition,—these, and his orderliness of mind, his amazing patience, and his deep underlying sympathy with the often inarticulate bewilderment and self-distrust of youth. His comments on students' themes were sometimes devastating; many an alumnus will recall his succinct blue-pencilled exposures of verbosity, pomposity, or inanity, yet somehow made with a geniality that took all personal sting from the criticism. He waged an unflagging war upon "Jargon," and he became even to his own Department the recognized arbiter upon matters of usage and good form. In bibliography his interests were wide and his knowledge extensive. In his last illness he spoke to a colleague of his desire to "have a finger" in the task of selection for the Rare Book Room in the library.

That air of well-bred sophistication, that posture

"Erect, with his alert repose

About him, and about his clothes," never concealed, from those who came to know him well whether as colleagues or students, his highly sensitive nature, his warm affections, and his fundamental kindness. On all counts—as scholar and writer, as lecturer and tutor, as friend and companion—Herbert Hartman has won a secure place in the succession of great Bowdoin teachers.

RHODES SCHOLARSHIPS

The Trustees are to award a number of War Service Scholarships in addition to the ordinary appointments.

Requirements as to age and college work completed are being modified for these War Service awards. Certain credits for military and civilian war service will be given in considering applicants.

All Bowdoin men interested should write at once for details and application blanks.

Books

ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN, Poems For a Son With Wings, Macmillan, N. Y., 1945. 123 pp., $1.75.

Once, sitting as an undergraduate in one of Professor Coffin's classes and somewhat idly taking notes, I suddenly realized that the words I was writing down as they came from his lips fell into a fairly regular metrical pattern. Since there was even occasional rhyme in his speech, I persuaded myself further that it could be divided roughly into four-stress couplets, the form in which he casts many of his poems. Poetry, I thought then enviously, just comes natural to the man. I still think so.

Robert Coffin's poetry is alive; it lives because it is natural, almost casual, as if first felicitously spoken and then written down. It is as rich with color, as down to earth—or of it—as the personality of the man himself. Those who enjoy the gusto and vitality of Rob Coffin's friendship—and is there anyone knowing him who does not?—must inevitably find pleasure in his poems. I suppose it is the warm humanity of the man himself, shining through the poems, which accounts in large part for their popularity.

But poetry with the effect, however natural or contrived, of artlessness is pretty definitely restricted in its scope. When it is illuminated with an indefinable something that seems to come from a happy fusion of beauty and simplicity of phrase and of the spirit—as are the best in our heritage of folk songs and ballads, for instance—it belongs in the magic realm of "pure poetry." But on lower levels, it is often no more electric than mere talk, than, as it were, the poet's own conversation. It is, of course, interesting for what he has to say and for the individual charm of his manner of speech, but it is no more memorable than speech, except perhaps as the accoutrements of rhyme and other conventional "poetic effects" make it so. And I am afraid it can also become as careless and repetitious as ordinary speech. In this book, perhaps more than in some of the earlier ones, there are really outstanding poems. But there are also others which do not strike me as being poems at all, but which are, rather, a type of occasional verse. These include many of the folksily humorous or barnyard pieces, as well as some of the more personal lyrics, and however they may be justifiable as examples of light verse, in my opinion they detract from the literary effect of a volume which contains poems of the highest quality.

In this book there is the same celebration of the New England farm and countryside and of the dramatic excitement of the seacoast that quickened the hearts of sons and lovers of Maine when they read earlier books of Robert Coffin. And the poet here goes beyond his merely local horizon by giving us poems both of planes and trains. The book is up-to-date in the sense that Mr. Coffin has kept up with the growth of his children and with the world that engulfs them. He sings of and for his flying officer son, and of his daughter's maturity and marriage. There are here the recurring themes to be found in Salt Water Farm and

Strange Holiness—spiritual exaltation of a mystic experience with nature, the strength and compassion of the father, understanding of small boys and other growing wild things—and there are several memorable brief narrative poems, such as the one that tells of the proud lady who burned down her family mansion, and herself with it, rather than leave it to grow less proud in the inevitable decay of time. Such themes as these give the book its poetic fiber. Some of the more occasional or personal poems can have, I think, at best only a temporary value.

There is nothing in this collection to my mind so fine as the well-known "Crystal Moment," written many years ago, which gives expression to the spiritual excitement of the poet suddenly given a glimpse into the very heart of nature. It occurs to me that from that poem on, with the title poem of Strange Holiness and many of his subsequent poems, Mr. Coffin has been working at this one basic theme: man's occasional oneness with nature, man's rare and fleeting insight into the secret of a pantheistic universe. Certainly it is in his poems on this general subject that he has achieved his greatest stature. The best poems in this book fall into that category; some of these are: "The Train Rushed On Like Time," "The Sign," "Rest," "The Thin Bird," "Mountain From The Train," "She Was The Spring," "Broken-Off Song."

From such heights, it is disconcerting, to say the least, to turn to a poem as unconvincing as "What Boys Are," in which a child describes a seal as a boy with a football helmet on, or "Wrath," which tells of the annoyance of bullfrogs when small boys dive into their pool. It is disappointing that the man capable of writing

A poem is a seashell snowed by sunlight

Far from the dark love-tumult of the sea can, in the same volume, celebrate sex in the barnyard with

Then motherhood wells up their throats,

The hymns boil over in hot streams,

The henhouse reels with soprano screams.

The master of the harem blushes. . . .

(And I don't believe one's distaste for this sort of thing stems from any lack of appreciation for chickens, which are, of course, all right in their place.) Incidentally, in a poem on cows there occurs the line "Every last sleek heifer's daughter"; Webster defines heifer as "a young cow that has not had a calf."

Perhaps it is wrong to cavil at trifles where there is so much that is truly and simply good in this book. Admiring and respecting Mr. Coffin as one must, anyone knowing him finds it hard to think that anything he has made is not of the first order of craftsmanship or artistry. And if I should say I would rather he published less and so gave us only his best work, I suspect that would put me in a very small minority among his admirers. It would be much easier to echo the sentiments voiced a few years ago by a certain grocery man in Brunswick when he was approached in his store by a tourist asking for directions to the house where Longfellow had lived. The grocer didn't know.

"But," expostulated the tourist, "Longfellow was America's greatest poet."

"Longfellow certainly was not," retorted the grocer. "The greatest poet in America is Robert P. Tristram Coffin and he lives right here in Brunswick, I can show you the house where he lives."

The tourist said mildly that he didn't believe Coffin could be the greater poet, since, after all, Longfellow's fame had been pretty generally acknowledged down through the years.

"No?" said the grocer—and this clinched the argument—"No? Well, let me ask you—did Longfellow ever win the Pulitzer prize?"

H. C. F. BELL, Woodrow Wilson and the People, Doubleday, Doran & Co., N. Y., 1945. Pp., 392. $3.00.

This book is high-priority reading for all Bowdoin men. It is of particular interest to the 1912-1916 generation many of whom sat at the author's feet and from him acquired their first appreciation of historical perspective. And those Bowdoin Tories who rate all Democratic presidents as Boeotians should find time, by all means, to assimilate this captivating biography of the Presbyterian Covenanter by our former Thomas B. Reed Professor of History, "Herbie" Bell.

This adept analysis and delineation of Wilson's character and personality are at once so sympathetic and objective, so searching and fair that one glimpses what made the man tick, and comes to understand how Fate maneuvered his League of Nations into long eclipse. The Professor-President stands forth as one of the tragic figures of History.

The book raises the question how a man with Wilson's wide and intimate knowledge of history and government could so perversely ignore the rules of the game as played in high places since the days of Pericles. Dr. Bell concludes he was so sure of himself in his idealism, so naive in his faith in the people, and so affected by the rarified atmosphere in which he dwelt that he gratuitously armed his enemies, carelessly estranged his associates, and unwittingly courted the repudiation he received.

One has good reason to believe that the debacle of Wilson's great project was in no small part due to his neglect if not disdain of the art of politics which, in its essence, is knowing how to get along with people and how to reconcile conflicting interests. "O Physician . . . !"

The highlights of this capital biography (the first one-volume life to appear) are the chapters dealing with the "too proud to fight" period, the imbroglio at Paris, and the no-quarter battle with Lodge, Borah et al in the Senate. Dr. Bell writes thereof with supreme detachment although as an Army staff officer he was closely associated with General Bliss at Paris. The vindictive and sometimes amusing activities of the Drogheda A. A. (Irish-American propagandists) he accords a fateful significance; and on occasion gives them a comedy touch that Aristophanes would have loved to use in his Acharnians.

The book has a warm style that never tires. Its punctuation is worthy of Stevenson. The author's epigrammatic judgments are penetrating yet fair. There is an index.

The Bowdoin community will delight to award "Herbie" an "A" in the course!

THE AUTHORS

Let's let the Saturday Review of Literature identify Professor ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN '15, Litt.D.: "That he is a real poet, with enormous vigor, with a magic quality of pictorial imagery, with an ability to invest homely things with intimations of immortality, nobody would deny."

Former professor of history at the College, now at Wesleyan, HERBERT C. F. BELL, Ph.D., L.H.D., Litt.D. (H. '37), is the author of Lord Palmerston (1936) and other historical studies.

THE REVIEWERS

Quill editor and Longfellow Scholar of a decade ago, JOHN SCHAFFNER '35, is now, after service in the Navy, an associate editor of Collier's, living in New York City.

CLARENCE H. CROSBY '17, former President of the Alumni Council, is a prominent Penobscot County lawyer, long active in political affairs.

NOTES

Dr. ALFRED O. GROSS, of the Biology Department, has published his one hundredth article or monograph since his coming to Bowdoin: "The Present Status of the Great Black-Backed Gull on the Coast of Maine," which appeared in The Auk for April (Vol. 62, No. 2): a contribution (No. 13) from the Bowdoin Scientific Station, Kent Island, Bay of Fundy, N. B.

"Government Guaranteed Production and Termination Loans" is the latest brochure by ROY A. FOULKE '19, A.M., vice-president of Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

The Winds of Fear, by HODDING CARTER '27, recently reviewed in these columns, has gone into an English edition (Gollancz). The London Times Literary Supplement review reads, in part: "How close to the truth the statement of the negro problem in the Southern States of America to-day which is made in this unaffectedly powerful novel may be an English reader would not presume to know; but the novel itself, it may be said, carries complete imaginative conviction. Indeed, not many novels bearing on the subject of white discrimination against the negro population in the South have been quite so persuasive as this or have left a stronger impression of thoughtful and fair-minded good sense. Parts of the novel, one should perhaps add, are strong meat, but nowhere does one suspect Mr. Carter of sensationalism. The story he tells has pace and vigour, evokes the atmosphere of its small town setting in wartime in fluent and assured strokes, and holds the reader's interest from first to last."

Necrology

1871 PERCIVAL JOSIAH PARRIS, oldest resident of Paris, Maine, died at his home on October 4. He was born January 5, 1849, in Portland, attended Paris Hill Academy, Bowdoin College, and Union College, Schenectady, N. Y., from which he was graduated in 1871. He taught school for a few years and then studied law, being admitted to the Oxford County Bar in 1879. The next year he was graduated from the Hamilton College Law School and was admitted to practice in New York State. In 1890 he went to Washington State, where he remained for two years. On his return to New York, he accepted a position with the New York Life Insurance Company, remaining there for 30 years. On his retirement in 1942, he returned to Maine, where he has since resided. He is survived by a son, Percival Kendall Parris, a niece, Mrs. Marion Parris Smith, and a nephew, Edward L. Parris, Jr.

1876 JUDGE JOHN ADAMS MORRILL, who had been in failing health for some time, died August 24. A lifelong resident of Auburn, he was born June 3, 1855, and was educated in local schools. He was admitted to the Maine Bar four years after his graduation from Bowdoin and continued in active practice until his appointment to the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine in 1918.

Judge Morrill served as an associate justice of the court for seven years, and as an active retired justice until 1933. He was a member of Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternity. From 1886 to 1925 he was a member of the Board of Overseers of Bowdoin and of the Board of Trustees from 1925 to 1928. The college awarded him the honorary LL.D. in 1912. Surviving relatives include two daughters, Dorothy Isabella and Olive Annie.

1883 Word has just been received of the death of HERBERT LINCOLN ALLEN on November 10, 1944, in Dalton, Mass. Mr. Allen was born on December 24, 1861, in Waterboro and prepared for college at Hallowell. During his career as an educator, he was principal of Dalton High School, Superintendent of Schools, a member of the Dalton School Committee, library trustee, and a member of the Massachusetts Teachers' Retirement Association. He was a member of Psi Upsilon fraternity.

1883 ARTHUR JOSEPH RUSSELL died in Minneapolis, Minn., September 25, after an illness of several months. Born in Hallowell, on March 14, 1861, he attended public schools there and was graduated from Hallowell Classical and Scientific Academy in 1879. A member of Alpha Delta Phi, he revealed his literary talents while an undergraduate. After a short journalistic apprenticeship with the Portland Advertiser, he journeyed west in 1885 to become a proof-reader for the Minneapolis Journal. For nearly fifty-five years he served that paper in many capacities. In more recent years he was the widely known writer of the column entitled "With the Long Bow." He was author of nine books, which now are collectors' items. Among them are Fourth Street and Loring Park Aspects. In 1908 he married Mary Warner, who survives, as does a daughter, Mrs. Stanley B. Newhall.

1889 ALBERT EDWIN NEAL died of a heart ailment August 24 at his home in Portland. Born in Brunswick, April 10, 1867, he moved to Portland at an early age and attended local schools there. Except for a few years in Boston, he practiced law in Portland, after being admitted to the bar in 1891. He was admitted to the U. S. District Court in 1898 and to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in 1904. A member of Psi Upsilon and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities, he received his M.A. at Bowdoin in 1892. Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Bessie Burgess Neal and two sisters.

1891 SAMUEL HODGMAN ERSKINE died at his home in Damariscotta on July 30, after an illness of ten months. He was born February 2, 1861, in Whitefield and attended Kent's Hill School. He served as principal of Lincoln Academy, Newcastle, for one year before going to Vermont to join the faculty of Rutland Academy. Leaving the principalship there in 1909, he accepted a school superintendency in Lancaster, Mass., but within a few years he returned to Vermont as superintendent of a seven town district under state supervision. In 1919 he came to Maine and purchased the Lincoln County News. He was prominent in Masonry, a trustee of Lincoln Academy, and a member of Zeta Psi fraternity. Survivors are a widow, a daughter and three grandchildren.

1895 DR. FRANK HERBERT MEAD, a prominent dentist in Bangor, died suddenly September 17. He was born April 27, 1870, in Bridgton. Six years after he received his diploma from Bowdoin, he graduated from the dental department of the University of Pennsylvania and, before going to Bangor, practiced for a time in Melrose, Mass. He was one time president of the Maine Dental Association, former member of the Bangor City Council, an active Mason, and a member of Theta Delta Chi fraternity. Surviving are his widow, a daughter, Mrs. Edward Herrich, and a son, Charles Stewart Mead.

1901 Born in Bangor, September 25, 1878, HERBERT LINDSEY SWETT, founder and proprietor of the famous Lakewood Theater, died at Skowhegan on October 20. A member of Delta Kappa Epsilon, Zube Swett was one of the best liked members of his class. He had what was called a patent knack for business and immediately upon graduation he took over the management of a trolley line in Skowhegan and its inevitable amusement park on Wesserunsett Lake. Not pleased with his efforts to improve the place, the owners discharged him. Zube believed the spot had possibilities, gathered together some capital and bought out his former employers. There began what became, under his enthusiastic guidance, the popular resort known as Lakewood and the summer theater colony rightly called "Broadway in Maine." A member of the Players himself, Herb Swett brought New York producers and actors to Lakewood and did not fail, even during war years, to conduct a season of high grade legitimate theater. Always actively interested in the development of Maine, his constant effort was to further the building of good roads. He was long a member of the State Development Commission, at one time president of the Maine Publicity Bureau and was Maine's member on the advisory committee for the New York World's Fair of 1939-40. In 1931 his college recognized his public service with the honorary degree of Master of Arts. It is devoutly to be hoped that the institution which he built, the institution that he was, will be carried on. Surviving are his widow and two daughters, Mrs. Grant Mills of Norwalk, Conn. and Miss Eleanor Swett of Skowhegan.

1902 The REV. DANIEL IRVING GROSS, pastor of the Athol Congregational Church for 14 years, died September 29 at Athol, Mass. He had been in failing health for a year. Born in Orland, February 10, 1875, Dr. Gross attended Thornton Academy, Saco, and the State University at Boulder, Colo., returning to graduate from Bowdoin. After two years at Harvard Law School, he entered Andover Theological Seminary and was ordained and installed at Marshfield, Mass. He preached at the Pilgrim Church of Nashua, N. H., moving to the Woodfords Congregational Church at Portland in 1918. He was a member of the National Commission on Missions, former president of the General State Conference and Missionary Society of Maine, and several times delegate to the National Council of Congregational Churches of America. Although never practicing law actively, he did earn his LL.B. from the Blackstone College of Law and was a member of the Maine Bar Association. A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he received the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity from Bowdoin in 1922. Besides his widow he leaves a daughter, Mrs. Charles Nelson, and a son, Virgil Gross.

1906 ROBIE REED STEVENS, native of Kennebunk, died in his home in Altadena, Calif., where he has resided in recent years. He was born November 25, 1884, in Kennebunk, graduated from Kennebunk High School in 1901 and from Thornton Academy, Saco, the following year. After graduating from Bowdoin he was employed by the International Banking Corporation. His work took him to many foreign countries, including Mexico, Panama and Russia. He was in Petrograd during the turbulent days of the revolution. While on his visit to Bowdoin in 1941, on the thirty-fifth anniversary of his graduation, Mr. Stevens was awarded the honorary degree of Master of Arts. He is survived by his widow, a brother and three sisters.

1906 Lacking any official confirmation, there seems to be no escaping the report that EUGENE EVELETH WING was executed by the Japanese on Leyte about two weeks before our troops landed there. Born November 28, 1883, in Fairfield, he attended Dean Academy before coming to Bowdoin, where he was a member of Zeta Psi fraternity. His work took him to London in 1906 following his graduation from college and from there to Singapore, Calcutta, and later to the Philippines, where he was affiliated with Massman & Company in Manila. He left Manila early in December of 1944 in his schooner intending to go to Australia, but he changed his mind, put in on the Leyte coast, and sought refuge in the hills. After a year or two, he was captured by the Japanese and kept in jail at Tacloban until the time of his execution.

1907 ENSIGN OTIS, senior member of the firm of Otis and Harmon, committed suicide by shooting on October 23. For several years a sufferer from heart trouble, an ailment much more severe than his most intimate friends knew, Mr. Otis had experienced progressively failing eyesight until he no longer felt the will to continue. Born in Rockland, September 7, 1884, he prepared for Bowdoin in the Rockland schools. A member of Kappa Sigma, he showed pronounced literary inclinations at college. He was managing editor of the Quill and won the Hawthorne short story prize. Although a practicing lawyer, he was associated for ten years with the Rockland Opinion and became its editor upon the death of his father. He served Knox County as Coroner and as County Attorney, was a director of the North National Bank and of Snow Shipyards, Inc. and when the banks were closed in 1933, he was appointed Receiver for the Security Trust Company. He is survived by his widow.

1908 FRED VALENTINE DELAVINA died suddenly November 6 at his home in New York City. He was born in Portland, October 5, 1885, was graduated from Portland High School in 1904, and received an LL.B. degree from Columbia Law School in 1912. Formerly associated with the firm of Walker & Redmond, he has been counsel for the Institutional Securities Corporation. He was a member of the Kappa Sigma fraternity at Bowdoin. Surviving are two brothers, Charles A. and Ramon E.; and two sisters, Miss Margaret E. Delavina and Mrs. Annie M. LeButt.

1908 GEORGE PALMER HYDE, Treasurer of Smith College for twenty-two years, died suddenly at his home on September 3. The son of William DeWitt Hyde, former president of Bowdoin, he was born in Brunswick, April 9, 1887. At Bowdoin he was a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Delta Kappa Epsilon fraternities. He received his law degree at Harvard in 1911, was admitted to the Massachusetts Bar the same year, and was associated with Tyler & Young and the Morss Real Estate Trust until 1922, when he was named treasurer of Smith College. In 1938 he was awarded an honorary M.A. degree by Bowdoin. Surviving are his widow, two sons, William D. '38 and Richard W. '43, and two daughters.

1909 JOHN ARA STETSON of Arlington, Mass., died suddenly at his home, Friday, August 3. He was born in Brunswick in 1886 and graduated from Brunswick

HE AND WHO ELSE? Surveys have shown that more than 600,000 of our service men hope to see the old campus again, when they return to civilian life. And they want to know just how far the G.I. Bill of Rights will go toward helping them finish their education.

Most service men are full of questions about the future these days. Thousands of them have written to us from all over the world, asking not only about going back to school, but also what to do about their National Service Life Insurance, and how the job situation is sizing up.

We've boiled down all the answers we could think of and put them in the handy, pocket-size, 40-page booklet described below. It's free, and we are mighty glad to send it to men on active duty anywhere, as well as to veterans already demobilized.

Or, if you have a son, husband or friend in the service, we shall be happy to send you a copy to forward to him. Just write us at 501 Boylston Street, Boston 17, Mass., and we'll put it right in the mail.

News of the Classes

FOREWORD

People, who seem to me to be more apprehensive than sensible, have been saying that, in the light of the changing views of education and present-day needs, the College would have a hard time to regain its pre-war usefulness and popularity—or some equally fool notion of a decadent institution.

It is comforting to report that there are over 100 former service men in the 325 undergraduates now on campus. Willing and anxious to continue their education from where they were obliged to stop a few years ago, these boys are taking their full in student activities. They are a little older, and more mature in their judgement of life, and that is all to the good. They are a valuable, steadying influence in their day to day life here with their younger confreres. We need not worry about the future of "Bowdoin the nurturer of men"; she is neither going into the background nor cracking up.

The Bowdoin Engagement Calendar just announced will be an ideal Christmas gift with which to remember your non-Bowdoin friends. The edition is limited but copies may now be secured from the Alumni Office at one dollar each.

HOW TO CONSERVE EYESIGHT and LIGHT!

Eyesight and light are both vital to the war effort. Use them wisely by following these suggestions.

1. Clean lamp bulbs and bowls regularly with a damp cloth. Dry thoroughly before using.
2. Use shades with white linings that reflect light, not absorb it.
3. Keep all light properly shaded to avoid harmful glare.
4. Arrange furniture so one lamp serves two or more people if necessary.
5. Always turn off lights in unoccupied rooms.

Let Us Heed Lincoln

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations."

Lincoln said this in 1865. Had Lincoln lived, reconstruction might have been a blessing, not a scourge.

The world is now facing reconstruction. Lincoln's words are pertinent in today's crisis and should be read and taken to heart at the beginning of every peace conference.

1901 Dr and Mrs. Raymond Tibbetts of Bethel were guests of honor at a community gathering on September 11 in honor of the doctor's 70th birthday.

1911 Dr. Albert K. Baldwin's address is 2501 Magnolia Avenue, Long Beach, Calif.

1919 Capt. Eugene H. Drake MC USNR has been awarded a Bronze Star Medal for meritorious service on a hospital ship during the period between November, 1943, and December, 1944. At this time his ship was evacuating wounded soldiers, sailors, and marines from beachhead operations in the areas of Roi-Namur, Einwetok, Guam, Saipan, Palau, New Guinea, and the Admiralty Islands. As chief of medicine aboard his ship for a period of twenty months, he saved the lives of many men who were suffering from shock and severe injuries.

Col. Boyd W. Bartlett, on leave of absence for the past three years, has been appointed professor of Chemistry and Electricity at the United States Military Academy at West Point. Graduated from Bowdoin with honors in 1917, his brilliant academic and athletic career at Bowdoin was followed by appointment to West Point from which he was graduated and commissioned a lieutenant of engineers in 1919. Resigning from the service, three years later, he pursued graduate study, being awarded a B.S. in Civil Engineering from M.I.T. and the M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Columbia. A year of study in Munich and five years as a physicist in the Bell Telephone laboratories preceded his appointment to the Bowdoin faculty as assistant professor of Physics in 1927. A full professor since 1931, Col. Bartlett's loss will be keenly felt at Bowdoin where he has so long taken a responsible and interested part in all phases of campus and alumni activity.

Dr. Walter H. Clark, a graduate of Williams, with Master of Education and Doctor of Philosophy degrees from Harvard, has been appointed instructor in psychology for the current academic year. Dr. Clark has been teaching in Lenox School, Lenox, Mass.

Professor Coffin was the Founders Day speaker at Wheaton College on October 13.

Mr. and Mrs. Manton Copeland have announced the marriage of their daughter, Elizabeth Williams, to Lt. (jg) John Chittenden Van Arsdell, Jr., June 23 in the Church of the Messiah, Woods Hole, Mass.

The sudden death of Associate Professor Herbert W. Hartman, Jr., on October 2 brings a heavy loss to the College and to the English Department of which he was so valued a member. Tribute to him and to his service to Bowdoin appears elsewhere in this issue.

President Sills has announced the election of Dr. Norman L. Munn, Professor of Psychology, to succeed Professor Emeritus Charles T. Burnett. Dr. Munn, now head of the department of psychology at Vanderbilt University in Nashville, Tenn., will come to Bowdoin in the fall of 1946. A native of Australia, with graduate degrees from Clark University, he is one of the outstanding men in his field. In addition to a distinguished teaching career, Dr. Munn has gained international recognition as the author of some 30 articles and eight books on psychological subjects. Since 1936, he has been associate editor of The Journal of Psychology.

Professor Van Cleve and Associate Professor Stallknecht expect soon to complete their Army service and to resume teaching duties in February.

THE DUAL PROGRAM—1926

WASSOOKEAG was the first school-camp offering the scholastic facilities of an accredited summer session and the stimulus of outdoor activities developed on a summer campus.

The dual program of School and Camp was originated at Wassookeag in 1926. Blending to a nice balance both education and recreation, the School-Camp combines the best features of conventional summer institutions—the scholastic and athletic program of the summer school; the outdoor setting and recreational facilities of the summer camp.

The boy who has reached the age of thirteen finds the dual program quite in tune with his interests. The Student is at once a Camper. The Camper is at once a Student.

The preparatory school boy of today is ready for more than the usual “good time”—he appreciates that to mark time scholastically, even for a summer, is to lose ground. For him the summer should certainly be a vacation—and, at the same time, an inspiration.

*Died February 2, 1946

EIGHTY years ago, in 1865-66, Bowdoin, which had sent into the ranks of the Union army and navy virtually all its undergraduates, was welcoming back to their interrupted studies the veterans of four years of civil strife. Just as now, in 1945-46, Bowdoin's student body is largely made up of returning boys suddenly grown older and wiser from participation in global war, so then were the paths of the old campus being trod by college boys, seared and sobered by war at home—college boys eagerly resuming their preparation for pursuits of peace.

The cover picture is a reproduction of one found among the papers of Charles A. Boardman '66 and sent to the College by members of his family. It is Mr. Boardman's class picture, taken probably in senior year, the Class of 1866. Photography of eighty years ago was not the split second affair it is to-day. The required time exposure, not seconds but minutes, may explain some of the poses but some will surely choose to credit youthful exhibitionism. While present day American young men have preferred the smooth shaven lip and chin, it has not been difficult of late to spot an occasional devotee to richer hirsute adornment, ranging all the way from sideburns and the full alfalfa to the neatly cropped mustache. (Perhaps for proven reasons of convenience and sanitation, the glories of the handlebar have been by-passed.) The hats of varying heights, color and lateral spread, the boots and the elegance of frock coats are certain to evoke a few chuckles of amusement but one may only guess the reactions of the boys who "fit for Ginral Grant", could they scan present day campus vogues. Thanks to the Class of 1898, the college bulletin board is now of bronze and electrically lighted; a brass plate tells us that the Class of 1903 provided the present day chapel doors—by request. But it's the same old chapel whose twin spires meant Bowdoin then as they do now. It's the same old college that Bowdoin boys have come back to from six wars. Let us hope they will never be called upon to leave it for another.

THE approaching meeting of the newly enlarged Alumni Council in Brunswick on March 8 and 9 will make Bowdoin history. Alumni Councils of several years past have worked on the plan for a broader alumni participation in the affairs of the College through a more truly representative Council. That plan was realized with the unanimous adoption of the new Association constitution last June. Elsewhere in this issue the President of the Council outlines the program for this first on-campus meeting of the enlarged Council. His hopes for resulting benefits to Bowdoin are echoed by President Sills and the Administration. Council members will find a warm welcome in Brunswick and an eagerness to get from them their constructive advice and help in meeting the puzzling problems of reconversion. The steadily growing participation of Bowdoin sons in the alumni fund has been a source of great assistance and encouragement in recent years. Supplementing that support is the participation of many more alumni through their duly chosen representatives in the Council. There can be but one result—a stronger Bowdoin.

BOWDOIN—M. I. T.

Bowdoin men, who have gone to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology on our "3-2 Plan," have had an unusual record there. To be sure, the war interrupted the program, and only a dozen of our students have so far taken advantage of the Plan. BUT, OF THE DOZEN, FIVE WERE IN THE TOP TENTH OF THEIR M.I.T. CLASS, ONE IN THE SECOND TENTH, ONE IN THE THIRD TENTH. This combined training should be very attractive in the years ahead. Bowdoin alumni, who know of schoolboys especially gifted in their aptitude for mathematics and science, should call to their attention this 3-2 arrangement. In five years such boys can gain many things of value—including two degrees—that four years at neither institution alone could provide.

Paul H. Douglas

Professor Catlin Reviews The Distinguished Career Of A Former Student

MAJOR DOUGLAS RECEIVING THE BRONZE STAR

MAJOR Paul Douglas '13, has returned from the wars with grievous wounds and fresh laurels. So, as he himself would be the first to remark, have many others and many graduates of Bowdoin; and under all the circumstances there can be nothing very surprising about that. But there is something a bit unusual, not to say heroic, when a man long past military age, a Quaker by religious profession, having for thirty years or more devoted himself chiefly to work in the "upper story"—teaching, research, authorship, social and political reform movements—suddenly leaves it all and a happy home to join the Marines as a private; goes through the gruelling ordeal at Parais Island ("physically the most strenuous trial of my life since football days"); qualifies for a captaincy before being sent to the South Pacific; spurns anything like a soft desk job and is restless and "rarin' to go" until he gets a front line assignment; and, according to all reports and indications, is not content to command from any convenient point of vantage or foxhole in the rear but jumps right into the middle of the fray at Peleliu and again at Okinawa with aforesaid disastrous consequences to his anatomy.

I suppose the invitation to write this sketch came to me in part on the theory that it takes an economist to catch an economist, and in part because, in those far-off days when I was a freshman professor, Paul Douglas was one of our most brilliant students, and in his last two years an assistant in the department. Even then his interests and enthusiasms were so varied that we never felt any sense of ownership; and to describe his subsequent career calls for the services of a battery of experts rather than the pen of a narrow specialist. As it is, I must rely upon some surviving letters from a highly intermittent correspondence, upon the ample resources of Dean Nixon, and the alumni clipping bureau at the Library.

No one will be disposed to deny that Paul has richly fulfilled the bright promises of his youth or that there has been a delightful consistency in his performances. The "Lin-colnesque character," which I find referred to in two recent newspaper accounts (perhaps a trifle anomalous as applied to an adopted son of Illinois with the surname of Douglas), was visible in the old days. That long list of honors—scholastic, debating, athletic—which appeared under his name in the Bugle is more than duplicated in the columns of Who's Who. He was one of those rare students, dear to every teacher's heart, who not only do all the assigned work but come back to ask for more. I recall distinctly a little piece of independent research he did in his senior year showing the amount of capital invested per employee in American manufacturing industries. It was he, after he had gone to the graduate school at Columbia, who prompted and largely financed the study which Austin MacCormick made of prison conditions at Thomaston and thus started another alumnus upon a notable career.

Probably we should be compelled to admit that Douglas had a number of Wanderjahre before he became somewhat fixed as professor of industrial relations at the University of Chicago in 1920. In his graduate course he followed in a measure the Continental plan of sucking the sweets from a variety of flowers by spending his middle year at Harvard. He taught for a year at Reed College with which Bowdoin has had so many pleasant ties; and another year at the University of Washington. His special field, as we all know, has been Labor, and all through the years he has been called upon to serve as a member of or as advisor to commissions in various states on unemployment, housing, and social security—all grist for his mill and the basis for some of his books. To his fellow labor economists his two books on Wages seem to be his most significant contributions.

There has probably never been a time when Paul has not had some cause or reform proposal to which he was devoting his energies and his persuasive powers, if in a minority so much the more to his liking. In Illinois he fought Samuel Insull and his group in the late 'twenties and early 'thirties when it was really dangerous to do so. In 1935 he was one of the leaders of a third party movement standing for "a new economic order." At the time when he entered the Marines he was a somewhat unconventional alderman from the 5th Ward in Chicago. His campaign for the senatorial nomination in 1942, when he won the down-state districts but lost out in Chicago, attracted almost national attention. It may be that his fame in this quarter is now somewhat obscured by that of his wife, Mrs. Emily Taft Douglas, who had better fortune in her campaign in 1944 for congresswoman-at-large. Quite true to form, since his return from the Pacific and while he is recuperating Paul is honorary chairman of the forward-looking group which calls itself "Appreciate America." And he was chairman of the committee which looked after the preliminaries of President Truman's Labor-Management Conference in November.

Such, in brief, is the record, and we are proud of it. But what of the attitude of this favorite son toward his Alma Mater? After all, one likes to have his admiration and affection reciprocated, or at least appreciated. There has been some mild comment and wonder, especially among men of his own college generation, at the infrequency of his visits to the campus and because he was not even present at the Commencement of 1938 to receive the Bowdoin Prize for "the most distinctive contribution in any field of human endeavor." But those of us who have met him from time to time elsewhere and who have kept reasonably familiar with his characteristic script, have never doubted his love and loyalty for the place of his intellectual birth. Any prejudice he may have had toward flying may have been overcome during his war experience, but the fact remains that he has usually been far afield. Economics, as some of us know, is a hard and jealous mistress, and while Paul has been sufficiently normal and virile not to belong to what some writer has called "the third American sex"—meaning college professors—he must almost always have had commencements of his own to attend and any number of unfinished tasks hanging over his head like swords of Damocles. There was a nostalgic strain in a letter which he wrote from the South Pacific in July, 1943:

This Commencement was the thirtieth reunion of my class. I have only been back to one since I graduated, namely in 1916, but I always think of the College at that time of year as well as at many others, and always with great fondness and affection.

Manfredi Azzarita

Robert H. Grant '32 Recounts The Courage And Zeal Of A Bowdoin Martyr

EDITOR'S NOTE—Robert H. Grant '32, of the English Department at the University of New Hampshire, a classmate and fraternity brother of Manfredi Azzarita, wrote this tribute to the distinguished service and sacrifice of a Bowdoin alumnus from information received from relatives and government officials. Translation of letters and documents, several of them in unfamiliar and colloquial Italian, was made by Eaton Leith of the Romance Language department at Bowdoin.

IN the early hours of the morning of March 24, 1944, Manfredi Azzarita, Bowdoin 1932, a Roman, died with three hundred and twenty compatriots,—machine gunned by the Nazi Gestapo, in the Ardeatine Cave on the outskirts of Rome. His crime was resistance to Nazi suppression of liberty and democracy. For seven years he had worked for liberty and democracy and understanding between America and Italy. For two years he had fought to preserve his country.

And for two years he had struggled with the underground to liberate his country from the oppressions of Fascism. In the spring of 1944 he died, at the age of thirty-two,—executed like a criminal, under the barbaric hostage system revived by Nazism.

Between 1932 and 1940 Manfredi Azzarita was director of an educational service, organized for the development of understanding between Italy and America by means of exchange of cultural information, students, and teachers. In this work, he became acquainted and friends with Mr. Alexander Kirk, then Chancellor of the American embassy in Rome, now Ambassador to Italy from the United States. With Italy's entrance into war in 1940, he was called into the service and enlisted as a captain in an armed mobile division. Later he was assigned to an anti-Nazi underground organization. In his work he had shown marked ability and intelligence, and had won for himself the confidence and affection of his superiors and comrades. During the preliminary armistice negotiations undertaken early in 1943 by the chief of this underground organization and the English General Carton de Wiart, who had been taken prisoner at Tobruk, Capt. Azzarita distinguished himself with his conduct of diplomatic commissions of unusual responsibility, which he fulfilled to the complete satisfaction of his officers and in complete agreement with General de Wiart. He was credited by both sides for his adroit conduct as liaison man. After the Italian armistice, Capt Azzarita went to Nazi-occupied Rome in September to organize underground groups there and to provide for contacts between the political and military leaders there and the government of the South. In this work he fought in co-operation with the American Fifth Army under General Clark. In Rome he organized with other officers a strong, clandestine military group, in which he directed a special section of combined political and military intelligence. He also directed distribution of arms to resistance groups and assisted isolated and scattered officers in locating such organized groups where their resistance efforts would count. Through this work, and by maintaining contacts with other underground organizations, he became a key figure in the Roman anti-Nazi resistance movement, both in its direction and in its intelligence service to the government of the South. Through his efforts, the resistance movement was supplied with a network of individual collaborators, and from both his personal and directed reconnaissance, the southern government was made cognizant of the relative strengths of German garrisons and supplies.

From the confession of a tortured prisoner, the Gestapo learned Capt. Azzarita's identity, and during the early hours of March 18, 1944, he was arrested by the German SS and imprisoned at the Gestapo headquarters on the Via Tasso. During his imprisonment, he was cruelly and barbarously tortured, but he did not reveal a single secret or the identity of a single underground worker of the clandestine groups. He assumed full responsibility for his organizations, and courageously and steadfastly maintained his opposition to Nazism.

That March, an anti-facist Roman hurled a grenade at a marching company of German soldiers. Thirty-two of the soldiers were killed. The patriot escaped. At midnight on March 23, 1944, three hundred and twenty Italian hostages were taken from the Gestapo headquarters on the Via Tasso, herded into trucks, driven outside the city, and in groups of four, marched into a large cave on the Ardeatine highway. There the Nazis massacred them with machine guns. The entrance to the cave was dynamited to prevent the families of the dead from recovering the bodies. Among the three hundred and twenty was Manfredi Azzarita. He left an aged father, a widow, and a daughter two years of age.

Manfredi Azzarita was not converted to love liberty and democracy. He was born to love them. His father, an eminent journalist of Rome, had been suppressed from practicing his profession since 1922 because of his anti-Fascist writings. With the liberation of Italy, he is now beginning again and is seeking contact with American newspapers that the liberation of Italy may be strengthened by her own people and that the work of Manfredi, the exchange of information between America and Italy, may be carried on. Signor Leonardo Azzarita has a deep regard for Bowdoin. He has tried to send Bowdoin newspapers, documents, and publications of anti-Fascist and anti-Nazi underground activities in Italy, but has as yet been unable to secure permission from the postal authorities of the occupation. He gives much credit to Bowdoin for the education in and inspiration for democracy that Manfredi had. In the religious memorial commemorating Manfredi's death, there is included the record of his Bowdoin degree and his membership in the Delta Upsilon fraternity. Signor Azzarita says, "(Manfredi) came from a family that was always anti-Fascist, and he learned also in America to love liberty and democracy. Italy has contracted a debt of gratitude toward America . . . , and I hope my countrymen will never forget it."

The liberated Italian government cited Azzarita posthumously and the Premier of the new Council composed his epitaph.

Bowdoin had many sons in this struggle for democracy. National boundaries and national allegiances divided some of them from the many. We do not know of the struggle that went on in Manfredi Azzarita's mind when he elected to support his country when it fought for ideals in which he could not believe. We know that Manfredi believed in democracy. We who knew him know that he loved

Italy. His intelligence and education and experience in America gave him an understanding of the underlying issues that Italian nationalistic propaganda of the 1930's could not touch. It takes little imagination to understand the struggle of his own feelings when Italy entered the war in 1940. From subsequent events, we know that no outside pressures or concern for his personal safety could force his choice. It was not an easy choice to make. To repudiate one's country, even for an ideal, is not easy. To support an instrument for the suppression of one's ideals is not easy, either. We who knew Manfredi like to think that he saw in the supporting of his country a chance to bend its course to the support of democracy. It must have been a relief,—a sad relief, when his country capitulated more honorably than she entered the war, and he was free to fight for the liberty and democracy that he loved. The courage and the zeal and the singleness of purpose that he exhibited then clears away the possible doubts we might have of him. And he gave his life in the support of that without which, life becomes meaningless. We are proud of Manfredi Azzarita.

THE adoption of the new constitution for the Bowdoin College Alumni Association created a greatly enlarged and more truly representative Alumni Council. The former Council of twelve elected members, the Alumni Secretary and the member appointed from the faculty remains as the Executive Committee of the Council. To that smaller group have now been added the members listed here. They include the Chairman of the Directors of the Alumni Fund and a member chosen from each of the several active local Alumni organizations; this addition gives the Bowdoin Alumni Council a membership of forty-seven. I may say here that a committee of the Council is to recommend certain amendments to the new constitution, one of which would make the treasurer of the Council and the Association a member of the Council and its Executive Committee.

The first meeting of the whole Council is to be held on the campus on Friday and Saturday, March 8 and 9. Members attending this important two-day session will be guests of the College. Already an excellent attendance is indicated.

It is to be expected, of course, that, in these busy times, those Council members who live nearest to Brunswick will find it easier to attend. We are gratified and pleased, however, that Bowdoin Alumni groups from Aroostook to Colorado will have their representatives among those present. Rooms will probably be assigned in the Theta Delta Chi House and all business sessions will be held in the Faculty Room on the third floor of Massachusetts Hall. President Sills will address the Council at the dinner in the Moulton Union Lounge on Friday evening, preceding the first business meeting. Between the two sessions on Saturday, the members are to be the guests of President and Mrs. Sills at a buffet luncheon at 85 Federal Street. College will be in full swing and I hope many Council members will arrive early enough on Friday to visit classes and teachers and to inspect the nearly completed rare book room in Hubbard Hall.

The program committee, under the chairmanship of Alden H. Sawyer '27 of Portland, himself a former president of the Council, has prepared an agenda for the Council meetings which is largely concerned with the topics which last year's Council voted should be the subjects of Alumni study. These topics are (1) Certain Phases of Undergraduate Life, (2) the Admissions and Public Relations Policies and Practices of the College and (3) an Appropriate War Memorial. The three business sessions of the two-day meeting on March 8 and 9 will be devoted to thorough discussions of these subjects and members of the College staff will speak to the Council on the three topics as their work and experience are related to them.

It is the hope and the aim of the Council to bring about a genuine examination into these topics, to encourage the freest sort of discussion and comment, to place before the Council the reactions of Alumni in the various localities where Alumni clubs function and to arrive at some Council consensus on each topic. Your Council President has been assured that Alumni opinion is wanted and that it would be of real help to the Administration as it faces the puzzling problems of reconversion. Your Executive Committee is confident that the Council sessions will accomplish those aims.

Another result, which I feel certain about, is the ability of attending members to carry back to their organizations a much better informed picture of their college in operation, than gatherings and visits on campus have previously permitted. Council members will surely react constructively to the opportunity for intelligent service to Bowdoin and distant Alumni will surely feel that they are closer to the College and able more effectively to work in Bowdoin's interests. It is planned to send to all Council members, members of the Governing Boards and to the Administration a comprehensive report of the Council discussions and conclusions.

That Bowdoin men generally will be sure to learn something of what the Council is doing, it is planned that the May issue of the ALUMNUS shall have a narrative story of the discussions and the conclusions reached.

Many other colleges have long enjoyed the benefits of large representative councils which meet at least once a year on the campus. Bowdoin's Alumni Councils of the past have served well and have amassed a record of important service to the College but not until now have we made our Council broadly and specifically representative of so many of our Alumni. My sincere belief is that great good will come to Bowdoin from the program being initiated.

Bowdoin In The News

ON January 16, citizens of Brunswick and members of the college community joined in a testimonial dinner to Adam Walsh, Bowdoin football coach on leave. Over 500 filled the USO building to capacity. Dean Nixon was the toastmaster and the speakers included President Sills, Governor Hildreth, Athletic Director Mal Morrell and Coach George "Dinny" Shay. In responding to the tributes paid to him Adam assured those attending that Brunswick and Bowdoin would always be close to his heart but that some weeks yet must elapse before he could say anything definite about his return. His champion Cleveland Rams are moving to Los Angeles, playing home games in the Coliseum there, and flying to eastern games.

CONNIE Mack was the umpire when this action shot of a tense moment was taken. Our perennially young Class News Editor, Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln '91, is getting safely back to first base. The annual series of softball games between the Kids and the Kubs appears to be drawing its customary attention in national news. Doc continues to lead in batting among these 75-year-old players.

THE name of Robert P. T. Coffin '15 headed the list of January elections to the American Society of Arts and Letters, membership in which is conferred for outstanding contributions in the several fields of literature. Professor Coffin, a former Pulitzer Prize winner, was accorded this new honor for his creative writing.

MRS. Elizabeth Kochs, Brunswick USO Director, has purchased the famous Harriett Beecher Stowe House and will open the birthplace of Uncle Tom's Cabin as a hotel as soon as necessary repairs can be made. Associated with her is Mrs. Mary Baxter White who will operate a gift shop on the premises. Both women have a deep sense of the value to Brunswick and the College of this historical landmark; they intend to make it a college inn which will be known for its hospitality and excellence of service.

First Parish Anniversary

On Monday evening, March 18, 1946, at 7:30, the First Parish in Brunswick will observe the one-hundredth anniversary of the dedication of the present Meeting House.

President Sills will be one of the speakers. Because of the long association of Bowdoin College with the Church, a cordial invitation is extended to all Bowdoin men to attend the exercises.

MAGAZINES of national circulation reported graphically and pictorially the recent scene in Maine's northern woods when Governor Horace A. Hildreth '25, his Secretary of State and the Governor's Council combined the pleasure of a hunting trip with the regular semi-monthly meeting to conduct the State's business. All in attendance reported the experiment a huge success. The report of it served to focus attention upon Maine as a vacation playground.

Members of the group snagged a respectable quota of deer and reports have it that His Excellency brought out a bear. There may be those who would dub the whole affair and its attendant publicity as politics. Perhaps — but surely not of the "smoke-filled back room" variety.

Sixty Thousand from Sixty Percent

Toward The 1945-6 Alumni Fund Goal*

THE objective for this year's Alumni Fund is Sixty Thousand from Sixty Percent. After conferring with committees of the Governing Boards, the Directors of the Alumni Fund canvassed thoroughly the current needs of the College and have decided that those needs can be met if the Alumni of Bowdoin will make their combined giving total at least $60,000. In their planning for the use of the Fund proceeds, your Directors have included more Alumni Fund Scholarships to worthy students entering this year and a further increase in the reserve being built up for later awards, the underwriting of the ALUMNUS and its expanding circulation, continued support of the college placement activities, some additions to Alumni Office equipment and a substantial Alumni gift to the College for such pressing needs as reconversion will undoubtedly present.

Demobilization is upon us much sooner than had been anticipated and demands are being made upon college personnel and facilities to a much greater extent than had been expected this year. While it is true that increased enrollment will mean greater tuition income, the sudden influx of students brings at once the necessity for expenditures which had been budgeted over the next few years. Additions to the college staff and certain deferred repairs to college property must be made now. It is possible that the close of the college year in June may not reveal the expected operating deficit in the rigidly pared-down budget but the Fund Directors feel sure that all the financial aid which this year's Fund can bring will be needed. They even hope that the dollar total sought will be exceeded.

Last year more than 3100 contributors gave through the Alumni Fund over $57,000. Pursuing the policy of recent years, the Directors are again placing emphasis upon the number of givers. They aim further to "spread the load" of our annual giving and have set as their objective, participation in this year's Fund by 60% of Alumni of known address. Specifically, they seek 3600 contributors, confident that the reaching of that objective will insure the needed dollar total.

On behalf of the Directors, the Chairman speaks a warm word of thanks for the flood of responses to his year-end letter. Those responses totalled well over $10,000. Contributions which have come in since the mailing of the Whispering Pines have swelled that total to $20,000. The number of contributors thus far is 1030.

The most important part of any Alumni Fund endeavor is the work of the Class Agents. Stimulating meetings of Agents have been held recently in Portland and Boston and the actual labors and responsibilities for the present Alumni Fund now rest upon them. To them falls the hard work of this cooperative money raising effort which has come to mean so much to our college. To them will be accorded the credit for the success of the effort. The Directors ask your ready and generous response to their appeals.

Bowdoin At "The Pops"

TILLIE'S going to town again. He's been doing it, of course, ever since he came to Bowdoin in the autumn of 1936, but this time it's something very special. "Tillie," as doubtless you have already guessed, is Frederic Erle Thornlay Tillotson, Professor of Music. The town is Boston. The place, Symphony Hall; the date, Monday, May thirteenth. The occasion is "Bowdoin Night" in the series of Boston's famous Symphony Pops Concerts.

The program, which will be a brilliant capstone to Professor Tillotson's first ten years at Bowdoin, features Shostakovitch's Piano Concerto to be played by Mr. Tillotson, with an orchestral accompaniment conducted by Arthur Fiedler. Other numbers include Twilight Song to be sung by Mr. Lloyd Knight, of the Class of 1945, with an orchestral accompaniment conducted by Professor Tillotson, who also composed the music to which Edwin Arlington Robinson's poem has been set. The Glee Club will sing a group of a cappella selections, and four Bowdoin songs accompanied by the Symphony Orchestra in specially written arrangements. Altogether Bowdoin Night at the Pops will present considerable Bowdoin talent. Indeed, Bowdoin Night promises to be a considerable evening.

TILLIE

The entire college community has shown an unprecedented interest in the program. Two special buses have been chartered to transport members of the college and the town to Boston on the day of the concert. The buses will return on Tuesday, May fourteenth. Tickets will be on sale at the College, but those who want to be sure of places may make reservations now by writing James F. Claverie, chairman of the Boston committee.

Faculty

PRESIDENT SILLS has announced several changes in the faculty and staff. Dr. M. Phillips Mason, who has been professor of philosophy since 1920, will retire in June. Dr. Manton Copeland, a Bowdoin teacher since 1908 and professor of biology and the natural sciences since 1910, will be on sabbatical leave next year and will retire in June, 1947. Assistant Professor Elbridge Sibley, now on leave of absence, has resigned.

The following appointments have been made: Assistant Professor of Philosophy, Dr. Robert S. Brumbaugh; Assistant Professor of Sociology, Dr. Burton W. Taylor, who taught at Bowdoin prior to entering service in the Navy; Edward C. Heintz to be Assistant Librarian; Jean Darbonet of McGill University to be Professor of French; Rossiter R. Bellinger, Instructor in English. Teaching Fellows appointed are G. Roger Edwards '35 Latin, Charles Mayaud in French, Robert S. Burton '43 in government and Joseph H. LaCasce '46 in mathematics. Frank F. Sebastianski '41 has been appointed assistant football coach and member of the physical training staff.

Professors Thomas C. Van Cleve, Noel C. Little and Newton P. Stallknecht are returning from service and sabbatical leaves have been granted to Assistant Professor Athern P. Daggett, Dean Paul Nixon and Dr. Henry L. Johnson.

Class Of 1949

TO the previous membership of the Class of 1949, registration on February 18 brought an addition of 60, making a total of 241 and establishing 1949 as one of our largest classes. Maine with 28, and Massachusetts with 23, head the geographical distribution of the incoming freshmen; Connecticut sends four, New Jersey two, Indiana, New Hampshire and New York, one each. All but twelve of the sixty are veterans of World War II.

Seven sons of Bowdoin fathers are among them: Bernard M. Devine (John J. Devine '11), William E.

Genthner (Sylvan B. Genthner '11), William D. Ireland, Jr. (William D. Ireland '16), Peter J. King (Leopold F. King '22), Gordon W. Olson, Jr. (Gordon W. Olson '16), J. Harry Staples (Albert H. Staples '06) and Earle F. Wilson, Jr. (Earle F. Wilson '14). Rowe B. Metcalf is the grandson of Charles S. Sewall '97 and James G. Utterback, Jr. is the great-grandson of Calvin P. Thomas M'75.

Other new men entering include seven special students and 28 who are given advanced standing and will affiliate with upper classes. Of these 35, all but three come to Bowdoin from the service and two of them, John C. and Joseph C. Caldwell, are sons of Wilbur C. Caldwell '11 as well as grandsons of Joseph C. Caldwell M'70.

Undergraduates

FROM 325 students during the fall trimester, Bowdoin's undergraduate body has now swelled to about 525. In addition to the 90 new men entering and the approximately 300 already on campus, nearly 150 former students have re-entered college.

And, as this is written, they are still registering. When the spring trimester gets fully under way it is possible that the student body will number almost 550, about half of them war veterans.

To house this sudden influx, the College has opened eight of the leased fraternity houses as college dormitories. To feed them, college dining rooms are being operated in three fraternity houses, supplementing the dining service in Moulton Union. No fraternity is yet conducting its own dining room nor is any fraternity group yet managing its own house, although, insofar as possible, the College has tried to assign students to rooms in the houses belonging to fraternities of which they are members. Five fraternity groups have been so housed thus far.

When financial adjustments can be made and fraternity properties returned to their owning corporations is not yet clear but it is hoped that such transfers may be made sometime next summer. Until those settlements and transfers can be arranged, the College will continue its operation of fraternity houses as part of the College equipment and to collect all charges for board and room as it has during the war.

As is the case with virtually all men's colleges, demand for admission far exceeds the normal. Bowdoin's capacity to house and teach can, perhaps, be expanded somewhat to meet the emergency. But there is a definite limit and the College must give priority to those more than 800 who left college for service and to about 150 formally admitted but prevented from entering for military reasons.

It is, of course, not possible to gauge accurately the college population of next summer and next fall but present indications point definitely to a substantial stepping-up of to-day's numbers. Committees of the faculty and of the administration are now wrestling with the problems of facilities and personnel which these sudden student increases create.

Bowdoin On The Air

PRESIDENT Sills, in his first public statement on the question of expansion, said on the Bowdoin-on-the-Air program of Wednesday, January 9, that Bowdoin "will expand to the utmost, but not beyond reasonable or practical limits." Thus, with an address by the President of the College, Bowdoin-on-the-Air began the first of its three programs scheduled for January. Led by John F. MacMorran, the Kappa Sigma Fraternity, winner of the Wass Inter-fraternity Singing Cup, presented a program of songs over Station WGAN on Wednesday, January 16, at four forty-five. C. Cabot Easton '48 announced. In an informal radio debate on Wednesday, January 30, Bowdoin defended the proposition, "Shall the Congress of the United States Adopt Senate Bill 1050 providing for an extension of the present Social Security Act to include National Compulsory Health Insurance?" Bowdoin sent Richard Roundy '47 and Veonor Sotak '49 against an all-female team from Bates composed of Miss Carolyn Booth and Miss Barbara Carter. Stan Weinstein '47 was moderator.

Although no definite schedule has been set for the coming trimester, it is expected that with the tremendous influx of students we may return to our bi-weekly schedule of broadcasts.

Athletics

THIS winter there have been more men in college and more interest in participating in intercollegiate athletics. Not only has the varsity basketball team had a fairly full schedule of games, but the junior varsity team has a schedule of ten games. These teams have done well, but they have had to face teams from other institutions that for some reason have many more returned war veterans than have been available here. The swimming and track teams are back in intercollegiate competition and are doing well, although the same lack of veterans has been a handicap in actual results. Through the courtesy of the Brunswick Naval Air Station we have had the use of their rink and have developed a good hockey team. If the ice will hold for a few weeks more this team should do well in the few games we have been able to arrange.

Dramatics

SINCE the last report on the Masque and Gown in these pages, there have been two plays presented in Memorial Hall. The Skull was directed by Nelson Towers, a former service man who is president of the club, and was much enjoyed by audiences who found more laughs than chills in the melodrama. Played by a cast of undergraduates and townswomen, it was presented on November 15 and 16.

On January 24 and 25 a faculty cast appeared in Maugham's The Circle, which had been played in 1935 by students. Mrs. Daggett, Mrs. Chisholm (formerly Katrina Nixon), Mrs. Stallknecht, Professors Little, Tillotson and Beam, Mr. Chittim, and Dr. Clark were warmly received by audiences that appeared to find the play little dated and properly revived. This is the first faculty-cast production since Tartuffe in 1941, but the custom seems sufficiently popular with both players and audiences to warrant its more regular use.

With the return of some production materials, it has been possible to replace the old rigging of the Memorial Hall stage, a very necessary step if lives were to be protected since much of the rather flimsy rope had been hanging since 1934. In the next few months new wiring will be purchased to guard against fire hazards and a new forestage will be installed to eliminate the creaking which has troubled both actors of the Masque and Gown and speakers at the Commencement Dinner in the past.

Of particular interest to the younger alumni should be the dedication of the year's program to the Masque and Gown members who died in the War. Among them are to be found four actors, one of whom had played professionally before he went into service, two production men, one stage manager, and one playwright. Their support of the dramatic program of the College will be greatly missed.

Another former service man, who happily returned in safety, will return to the campus in April when his farce comedy is tried out by the club. Many universities which boast dramatic departments are seeking new playwrights with manuscript plays worthy of production. Four such Bowdoin playwrights have recently offered new plays to the Masque and Gown, and from them A Dark Horse of a Different Color by Edwin Vergason '39 has been picked for production on April 25 and 26 with a probable repeat performance at Ivy. It is to be hoped that some of the other new plays may be tried out next season.

Although the one-act play contest had to be suspended this year for lack of suitable scripts, the College will be treated to a March production of Eliot's Murder in the Cathedral, by the Witan Society, which thus joins the Classical Club and the French and German Departments in enriching the theatrical fare of the community. Like The Skull, this play will be directed by an undergraduate, James Cook.

Reunions

HEADQUARTERS for reunion classes have been tentatively assigned in dormitories as follows: 1916, Hyde Hall; 1921, Moore Hall; 1926, South Appleton; 1931, North Appleton; 1936, Maine; 1941, Winthrop. 1896, 1901, 1906 and 1911 are reported to be arranging off campus headquarters. Few classes have their plans complete but such reports as have been made point to a large commencement attendance on June 7 and 8. The Bursar faces a difficult problem in finding accommodations for all who are likely to return. When reunion classes are able to state more definitely the space they will require he hopes there may remain sleeping accommodations for others. But he asks all alumni to remember that both the campus and the town are still crowded and that the College is still further hampered in the effort to provide for returning alumni by unfilled shortages in equipment and a lack of personnel. Those who can do so will contribute to easing the situation by arranging their own Friday night accommodations. Despite crowded conditions, the Victory Commencement, Bowdoin's 141st, is certain to be a momentous and an enjoyable occasion.

Phi Beta Kappa

ON Monday, February 25, the Alpha of Maine held its initiation in the Alumni Room in Hubbard Hall. Carl H. Lebovitz '47 was the only initiate.

Following the ceremony the members of the society assembled at the Union for a dinner in honor of faculty members returned from military and government service. The honored guests were Professors Thomas C. Van Cleve, Noel C. Little, and Newton K. Stallknecht, Coach George Shay, Dr. Burton W. Taylor and Dr. Henry Russell.

In the evening Colonel Boyd W. Bartlett '17, head of the Department of Chemistry and Electricity at the U. S. Military Academy and formerly Professor of Physics at Bowdoin, addressed an open meeting in Memorial Hall on the subject, "The Physical Sciences and the Natural Security."

Placement

THE abrupt and dramatic end of World War II translated into action the post-war plans and the complete organization of the Placement Bureau. Thirty-six alumni placement committees strategically located on a national basis involving the services of hundreds of Bowdoin men are already assisting registrants to find their places in civilian life.

For some, this problem of reconversion will be relatively easy, since their old positions are waiting for them. For others, the process may be more difficult, because they are uncertain as to their desires and have no position in prospect. The problems are many and confusing. The Placement Bureau and those identified with its activities stand ready to assist.

The rate of activity, of course, depends upon the speed of demobilization of our armed forces, the geographical preference of the veterans, and certain economic factors. A number of the committees have been unusually active, and others will be serving before long.

Through their efforts already over one hundred returning veterans have been happily located in civilian pursuits best fitted to their qualifications.

Placements have been made in nearly every section of the country and with several firms operating abroad. For the past several months the Bureau staff has interviewed a large number of returning veterans and other alumni. Part-time placement of students on the campus and in the town has reached a new high.

Bulletin No. 3 will soon be released to all committee members and a brochure to be directed to industry is now on the press. At this time Alumni could be especially helpful if they would send to 302 Massachusetts Hall knowledge of opportunities. Information received by the Bureau will be forwarded to the proper committee chairman.

Since the last appeal several much needed Bugles have been sent to the Bureau. The Director appreciates this assistance and would be grateful to Alumni who could supply Bugles for the following years to complete the files: 1920, 1922, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1930, 1932, and 1936.

Four undergraduates completed their degree requirements this month. Since all of them requested that their degrees be awarded at the June Commencement, there were no interim graduation exercises.

Where There's A Will There's A Way

To Help Bowdoin College

The College has received notice of the following legacies:

$1000 from Frederick V. Delavina '08 for the general purposes of the College.

$1000 from William R. Needleman '18 to become a part of the general fund of the College.

Charles Theodore Burnett

MANY who learned of the death of Dr. Burnett through the daily press thought chiefly of the College which he served so long and so well. We who live in Brunswick were equally concerned for the great loss which had come to the town. In the days while grief was still fresh, the number of people of all types and interests who expressed their sorrow with deep feeling was remarkable. With surprising frequency Dr. Burnett was spoken of, not only as a fellow townsman respected and admired, but as a friend. Not often have those lost to our community through death been missed by so many. His personal touch had always the charm of great friendliness and to all he gave of himself with unconscious generosity. Many can say of him what Eugenie de Guerin said of her poet brother after his death, "He afforded us so much of that by which we all live."

His relation to the public life of Brunswick began early when his capacity for affairs designated him as one who should be chosen a member of the Committee of Twelve. More than once he was chairman of that group and the characteristic way in which he represented it in town meeting is well remembered. The debate over some recommendation might have become noisy and acrimonious but, as he explained and elucidated with his invincible courtesy, quiet and good feeling slowly prevailed.

In the various organizations to further good causes, Dr. Burnett was sure to bear a generous part, often accepting and carrying for long periods the responsibility of leadership.

In one cultural field, that of music, his contribution to the life of Brunswick was noteworthy. From his boyhood in the home in Turner's Falls he had been interested in music. His mother possessed a voice of great beauty and in order to accompany her he set himself early to master the piano. Music thus entered into the fiber of his nature and later this strong interest, together with Mrs. Burnett's fine musicianship, created a definite atmosphere in their home. For musicians visiting the College to repair there after their concerts became a custom much appreciated by those who gathered with them to enjoy these "ambrosian nights." Every effort to increase the musical privileges of Brunswick had Dr. Burnett's assured support.

With all of his self-giving to various community enterprises, his first loyalty, after his never-failing devo-

As one contemplates the life we have been recalling the question naturally arises as to what element of character was most significant in making it what it was. To this question Dr. Ashby at the funeral service gave an answer that will not be forgotten. Seeking in few words to bring before us the central quality in Dr. Burnett's nature, with fine insight he chose a scene from the Book

tion to his life work as a teacher, was to the church. This he showed constantly as individual member and as officer. With great fidelity and with disregard of ease and convenience he bore his part in its activities. Never was there anything perfunctory or conventional in his support. He believed in the church with all the earnestness of his nature and he carried it on his heart. In his unfailing cooperation with it, in his casual reference to it, in his whole attitude toward it he revealed his conviction of the high place the church should hold in the life of men.

of Kings. It pictured the moment when the siege of Samaria was at its most desperate point. To reassure the people the King in royal vesture was walking on the city walls. As in his progress the outer robes were parted it is written "the people looked and behold he had sackcloth within upon his flesh." Sackcloth, the ultimate symbol of humility.

Charles Burnett had superior gifts, his accomplishments were important, distinction of character and bearing were his, but always in his heart he "walked humbly with his God."

CHAUNCEY W. GOODRICH

A Minute Adopted by the Bowdoin Faculty, February 25, 1946

AS WE turn a corner in the history of the College and face into an era of experiment and adventure in liberal education, it is our sad duty to pause and note the passing of a man who, for forty-two years, in Bowdoin and in Brunswick, was in himself a liberal education of a kind we shall do well to remember as a model in the years to come.

In the death, on January 31, 1946, of Charles Theodore Burnett, Bowdoin College has lost one of its fine teachers, both in the length and character of his service, and one of the distinguished company of Cleaveland and Packard, Lee and Robinson, Hyde and Hutchins, the roll of whose very names is almost synonymous with Bowdoin. If the arts are to remain liberal, it will be well for us to recall this teacher who was a gentleman before he was a scholar, and a Christian before he was a critic of human behavior.

A New Englander, born in Springfield, Massachusetts, on June 24, 1873, trained at Amherst, in the Class of 1895, along with Calvin Coolidge and the man who was to become one of his best friends for life, Dwight Morrow, a teacher at Tome Institute and at the Hill School, a doctor of Harvard in 1903, Charles Burnett came to Bowdoin in 1904, as an instructor in psychology; he was made a full professor in 1909; he acted for a time as Registrar; he served the College ably in classroom, committee room, and community for forty years until 1944, when he became professor emeritus and was honored with the degree, honoris causa, of Doctor of Humane Letters, an academic distinction he had previously received from his own Amherst College in 1930. But to the day of his death, this man still thought of himself, and indeed was, an active and devoted member of the College family. Not the least example of his making Bowdoin a central design in his rich and full life was his handsome biography of his counsellor and intimate friend, and Bowdoin's handsome and eloquent and famous President, William DeWitt Hyde. Truly, this is a book of Bowdoin, both in its subject and in its author.

Yet the teacher Charles Theodore Burnett is only one part of the man we knew and loved and shall miss.

Seldom does it happen that one good man can so multiply himself and his goodness. Charles Burnett was not only one of the first professors at the College; he was also one of the first citizens of the town of Brunswick. In town meeting, in the Committee of Twelve, in the councils of his party, in every good civic cause, from the Girl Scouts to the Red Cross, he was a participant and a leader. He was also a first and distinguished, kindly, and indispensable member, as well as a Deacon, of the First Parish Congregational Church. He had its music and its fellowship always at heart. I recall from my boyhood the infinite pains he took on the binding and care of our church anthems. His fine handwriting on each anthem is a memorial to the man.

As a lover of music, Charles Burnett made himself memorable both in the town and the College. The intimate gatherings at his house, of the makers of music and of his many friends who loved it, through the years, have probably meant as much to the cultural life of our place as anything that ever happened here. He and his lovely, talented wife, a concert cellist of the first water and a daughter of an old and famous seafaring family of Brunswick, made their home a home of the best in music for strings or voice from the wide world.

But it is as a man and a friend that Charles will be longest and best remembered. How many hundreds of people he helped with his kindly interest and ready sympathy will never be known. Only the other day I heard of an instance where his generosity saved the life of a struggling graduate of the College. In such instances of kindness and courtesy, this man of Bowdoin will remain a very real presence and strength for all of us to whom Bowdoin means home.

No one knew each gentle word he said
Would build up to such marble and bright bronze,

His gestures of gentility and calm
Turn to such windows as transform a world
With lovely fire in sunsets and the dawns.

Yet here he stands, a man four-square, part song,
Part nights of mirth, part solid friends, part flame.

He will go on improving town and church
And College where his heart was like a law,
This man we shall recall by his first name.

Books

Farmer Takes a Wife. By JOHN GOULD. (New York: William Morrow & Company. 1945. Pp. 153. $2.00)

In Lisbon Falls nearly everybody reads The Enterprise. Folks also read it up Durham way, at Peppermint Corner, in Webster, and in Bowdoinham. Its editor, John Gould '31, dislikes big towns, big words, big bluff—especially big towns. "New York," he confesses, "is just the same as slow death, and costs more." All the news that's fit to print does not appear in the columns of The Enterprise, but if the East Durham road is slippery or if a litter of kittens with double toes arrives at Carter's Corner, you can read about them in John's paper. "We feel the less our readers know about Washington, the happier they will be," he remarked in a recent editorial. Obviously, if the UNO wants any space in The Enterprise, it will have to locate in the vicinity of Lisbon Falls. This hard-headed editorial policy pays off handsomely in subscriptions (per annum in advance: $1 in circulation area, $2 elsewhere).

Readers of The Enterprise stand ready to back up the editor when he declares: "We can't give you President Truman, but we quote Judge Jack now and then; we can't give you Greer Garson, but we can mention Hubert's heifers; we don't have any Latin Quarter, but we can show you a half-dollar Mr. McFarland spent; we don't have any Boylston Street, but we get along pretty well without one. Somehow we think people like our substitutes better." John is right, of course, because his news items are so intensely local that they achieve universality; moreover, they are written in the lean, laconic speech, and phrased in the narrow idiom and wry eloquence of down-East language.

When John is not hustling to get out the weekly issue of The Enterprise, he is busy adding to his already impressive stature as a homespun chronicler of the folkways of Maine. Farmer Takes A Wife glows with his affection for Lisbon Falls in particular, and the State of Maine in general. The author likes people whose lives are rooted in the soil; he cherishes their folk wisdom; he contemplates fondly their oddities and whim-whams; he lingers lovingly over their pungencies of phrase, their whimsical understatements, their Yankee aphorisms. The book records hilariously the orientation of John Gould's Boston-born wife into the tall doings on a Maine farm. Under the highly competent tutelage of her husband and his Uncle Timothy, she catches on quickly. Indeed by the time Uncle Timothy gets through with her she is ready to agree with Hiram Ricker, who always said he enjoyed going to Boston because he felt so good when he got home again. One of the first things she learns is that "All Maine people are natural-born liars," which—as Uncle Timothy reminds her—"is not at all so hideous a distinction as being a trained liar—the kind better known elsewhere.” With this lesson behind her, she is prepared to discover Maine apples growing as large as grapefruit, and to believe the family legend of Oscar the bull making a long-distance telephone call to Aunt Hulda in Cleveland, Ohio.

In fact, the one unfailing crop produced on the Gould farm is tall stories. There is the one about a prosaic neighbor, Henry Jorgen, who found a sea-serpent in his pasture during the rainy season. “Not awful big,” reported Henry, “but pretty-colored. He’s green and orange, with butter-colored spots.” Another concerns Satchel-Eye Dyer whose difficulty in distinguishing his house from his barn led (not unnaturally) to considerable confusion. And there is (or was) J. Lorenzo Bascom, who invented a perpetual motion machine with results which rival those accompanying atomic fission.

Happily, there is no trace of the dilettante in John Gould’s engaging rural sketches. A Maine farmer, born and bred three generations deep, the author is not a member of that currently fashionable cult of urban sophisticates whose hardy summer pioneering in our Vacationland is done in strapless evening gowns, with all the comforts of ice-cubes and a fleet of shiny stationwagons. His enthusiasms—even for Maine—have sensible limits. John prefers to enjoy his snow-storms when they are cozily confined to prints by Messrs. Currier and Ives. Real ones “break limbs off trees, pull down fences, gum up tractor wheels, and get down your neck.” Farmer Takes A Wife is also free of the sentimental cant popularized by “nature-fakers” who pretend to find sermons in silos, blessings in barns, and good in everything. The Gould farm is not an escape, it’s a livelihood. “The best thing about living on a farm,” the author remarks sagely, “is that you live on a farm.”

Farmer Takes A Wife is a lyceum of laughter, a chautauqua of chuckles. Like our Maine weather, it has everything: Indian stories, recipes for making vinegar pie, hints about catching heifers and educating cosset lambs, a patented method for disposing of duck eggs, and helpful homilies on rigging bee hives and grading apples. And best of all, the book contains an eminently satisfactory excuse for staying in bed late in the morning. Grandfather Gould put it neatly: “He said as soon as he got up expenses set in.” This piece of unanswerable logic may help to account for the fact that 30,000 more copies of Farmer Takes A Wife have just been put on the press. John Gould now belongs to that droll company of Maine immortals which includes Seba Smith, Artemus Ward, Arthur G. Staples, and E. B. White. In their world of innocent merriment there is but one law: As Maine laughs, so laughs the nation.

HERBERT BROWN

THE REVIEWER

Professor of English at Bowdoin and Managing Editor of the New England Quarterly, HERBERT ROSS BROWN, is at the moment confronted with the serious reconversion problem of finding a class room on the campus large enough to accommodate all of the students who have registered for his course in American Literature.

ENTREATY

Time, you merry-making fool,
I know your gay disguise.
I learned in youth at folly’s school
Your make-believe and lies.

I learned your blandishments by heart,
Your jargon and your quips.
I too have played a jester’s part
With mocking eyes and lips.

Grin out the æons, old buffoon,
Until your role is done.
Deceive with your great false-face moon
Men who have braved the sun.

But spare him who has steeped to climb
An hour to fill his scrip,
And him who seeks a Grail—O Time,
Leave him to trim his ship!

Grant them, the undismayed and young,
Some one of all their prayers.
These blasphemies that rule my tongue
Are mine alone, not theirs.

—HERBERT HARTMAN

H. H.

O loyal and tall, O merry and fair
To everyone, with always the air
That this was the handsome thing and breathless,
Cavalier, debonair and deathless,
We can no more imagine you dead
Than imagine the meal without the bread,
Savor, and salt, imagine no song
When the northwest wind blows strong.

Scholar you were and yet stayed young,
Looking always for smiles among
The sober and the deepest words;
Your laugh was like the flight of birds.
Worrying only for another,
A teacher who was more, a brother—
What straight words are there made which can
Add up to so straight a man?

One morning, years ago, in frost
I saw a buck-deer where he crossed
The meadow slow, with wide breath showing
Like rainbows in the low sun’s glowing,
His head as grave as a comely tree.
Sudden he sprang there playfully,
Danced light-footed as a fawn,

ROBERT P. TRISTRAM COFFIN

THE AUTHORS

Entreaty, an unpublished poem by the late HERBERT HARTMAN, Associate Professor of English at Bowdoin and for five years Book Review Editor of the Alumnus, appears for the first time in the current number of the Quill.

H. H. was read by Robert P. T. Coffin at the memorial services held for Dr. Hartman in the Bowdoin Chapel.

Both poems are reprinted in these columns with the permission of the Quill.

John T. Gould ’31, author of New England Town Meeting (1940) and Pre-Natal Care for Fathers (1941), which have been reviewed on these pages, became last year the editor and owner of the Lisbon Enterprise. John’s new sheet is described by the Christian Science Monitor as “perhaps the most archaic newspaper in the State of Maine.”

NOTES

French Patterns in Quebec and New England is the leading article, by Edward B. Ham ’22, in the New England Quarterly for December.

The Southworth-Anthoensen Press of Portland, Maine has printed for private distribution A Prologue for Shakespeare’s Winter’s Tale, Acts IV and V. An Outdoor Presentation of the Masque and Gown, Bowdoin College, May 21, 1943. Text by Stanley P. Chase. Stage Directions by George H. Quinby.

At the sixtieth annual meeting of the Modern Language Association of America, held at Chicago last December, William N. Locke ’30 contributed a paper entitled Notes on the Vocabulary of the French-Canadian Dialect Spoken in Brunswick, Maine. Professor Locke has been recently appointed chairman of the Department of Romance Languages at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The fame of Bowdoin’s Pulitzer Prize poet is not limited to any mere national confines. Lieutenant John H. Rich Jr. ’39, while interviewing prisoners on an island in the Pacific, reports that he came across a Japanese who had read with great enjoyment and profit the poetry of Robert P. Tristram Coffin ’15. Rich adds that of course this Nipponese was of a very intelligent and superior type.

Alumni Associations And Clubs

BOSTON

Driving rain notwithstanding, some 200 members of the Bowdoin Club of Boston gathered in the Statler’s Georgian Room on Friday, December 7, to attend the Club’s Victory Dinner and to welcome returning Bowdoin service men. Previously made dinner and theater engagements did not prevent the attendance at the pre-dinner ceremonies in Parlor A of many alumni who parked wives in the lobby while they exchanged Bowdoin greetings on the mezzanine. President Noel Deering ’25 called on Rev. E. B. Holmes ’00 to say grace and, following the delicious lobster thermidor dinner, presented an array of speakers who kept the members entertained until nearly ten o’clock. Former president Jim Claverie ’10 announced the Bowdoin night of the Symphony Pops in May and gathered a list of table reservations which points to an early sell-out of the floor. Members of nearby Bowdoin Clubs will be given an opportunity to procure tickets as soon as a definite date has been set.

Sam Ladd gave a stimulating account of the Placement Bureau's success in finding jobs for Bowdoin veterans and passed much of the credit to local placement chairmen. The Alumni Secretary's brief recital of alumni activities was followed by a characteristically amusing response from "Uncle Dan" Stanwood, Professor Emeritus, who had been unable to attend the club's Old Guard night last April.

Dean Nixon delivered the major talk of the evening. Predicting that the campus buildings were "certain to be bulging" ere long, the Dean admitted Bowdoin's responsibility to admit former students as they return from war and to admit as many others as the facilities and personnel of the College will permit. But he fervently hoped that any enrollment expansion beyond the limit of 650 will be temporary; that Bowdoin will continue its rigid policy of admitting only "men of quality"; that Bowdoin will not think of diluting its instruction. The Dean paid a sincere tribute to President Sills in the form of a laugh-provoking analysis of his honors and closed with a stirring evaluation of those Bowdoin men who had met so gloriously their responsibilities.

Regretting Abe Schwartz's inability to be present to tell of his prison experiences in Manila, President Deering introduced John Parker '35, lately of the Navy, who gave a very informative account of the problems and duties of a naval lieutenant on General MacArthur's staff. The last speaker was Major Everett P. Pope '41, holder of the Congressional Medal of Honor. His modest recounting of incidents in the taking of Peleliu revealed much that had not been reported by the press. He stated that "the war's real heroes were those men who were not coming back."

NEW HAVEN

Members and their ladies to the number of 100 assembled at the Lawn Club on Thursday, January 31, for the annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Connecticut. President James E. Rhodes, 2nd '97 introduced Lt. Gov. C. Wilbert Snow '07 who recounted in amusing fashion some of his political experiences, made a plea for more active participation by college people in affairs of government, and closed with a warm appreciation of his friendship with Dr. Burnett, whose sudden death had just occurred. Samuel A. Ladd, Jr. '29, Placement Director, reviewed the work of his bureau and the many cooperating placement committees among the alumni. The Alumni Secretary spoke of the value to the College of the broadening interest of our alumni. President Sills reported on the state of the College, mentioned some of the current problems in Brunswick, and closed with a strong appeal for the correction of some ills that have befallen the work in our secondary schools. His statement that "the tendency to dodge and neglect the teaching of the classics, mathematics and modern languages threatened to undermine the foundations of American intellectual life" was widely quoted in the press.

At the business meeting, President Rhodes was reelected as was the secretary, Wolcott H. Cressey '26.

NEW YORK

The annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of New York City was held at the University Club on Friday, February 1, with 180 members present. Laurence A. Crosby '13 presided and introduced those at the head table, Professor Emeritus Wilmot B. Mitchell '90, Hoyt A. Moore '95, Emery H. Sykes '94, Henry A. Huston '79, Harrison K. McCann '02, Frederick E. Hasler H'43, Ralph L. Barrett '16 and E. Kenneth Smiley '21, Acting President of Lehigh University. Major Everett P. Pope '41, holder of the Congressional Medal of Honor, spoke briefly and modestly of military decorations and asserted that the real heroes were those who were not returning. Harvey D. Gibson '02 told of his Red Cross experiences in Europe, some observations on the black markets of Germany, and injected an amusing plug for his winter sports interests in North Conway. President Sills recounted the problems of the College with the sudden influx of returning students. He expressed his appreciation for Alumni support and asked for continued criticism, constructive or otherwise.

Cedric R. Crowell '13 was elected president for the ensuing year and Secretary Richard C. VanVarick '32 was reelected. Ernest G. Fifield '11 was elected member of the Alumni Council.

PHILADELPHIA

The largest meeting on record was held at McAllister's, Saturday, February 2, with 75 members and ladies present. A large number of returned service men in uniform and civilian clothes added to the numbers and the gaiety of the occasion. President Hayward H. Coburn '28 introduced Alumni Secretary Seward J. Marsh '12, who spoke in appreciation of the expanding support alumni were giving to Bowdoin, and Commander Noel C. Little '17, who reported on the conditions and problems at the College. At the business session, Clifton O. Page '13 was chosen president, Earle F. Maloney '12 vice-president, John W. Leydon '07 was reelected secretary with J. Edward Ellis '44 as his assistant, and John H. Halford '07 was named to the Alumni Council. It was voted to cooperate with the College in bringing the Glee Club to Philadelphia. A social hour followed the adjournment of the meeting.

PROVIDENCE

The Association of Rhode Island ended a period of inactivity on January 21. Having lost to the service and the calls of employment all its officers, the club's members were called together by Dana M. Swan '29, a former president of the club. Some fifty members gathered at Johnson's Hummocks to greet Dean Nixon. The Dean told of the conditions at the College, discussed the matters of tuition and the future enrollment at Bowdoin, and the matter of requirements for the two degrees now granted. The consensus of those present was that both enrollment and tuition should be kept low and that the B.S. degree should indicate something more than a failure to pass Latin. Officers elected were: president, Craig S. Houston '20; vice-president, Henry C. Haskell '18; treasurer, Franklin A. Burke '29; secretary, Elbert S. Luther '40. Marshall Swan '29 was chosen the representative member of the Alumni Council and Ralph R. Meloon '15 was named placement chairman. The entire potential membership of about 125 was named as members of the placement committee. Those present pledged their support to the efforts of the Placement Bureau and expressed the belief that there were plenty of good positions open in the area.

The Boards insisted on charging rent for the baseball association's room in Winthrop.

The Orient deplored the absence of football. "There is no reason why a good, well-conducted game of football should not be as interesting as any other athletic sport. We have plenty of good grounds—plenty of men—all we need is a little enthusiasm."

On elapsed time the seniors won the fall boat race from the sophomores and juniors, but the handicap deduction gave the race to the juniors. The track and field sports on the same day consisted of half-mile walk; throwing the baseball; hundred yards dash (best time 11 seconds); half-mile run (2:19); two mile run (11:19) running broad jump (15.65 feet); hurdle race; standing broad jump.

An adjourn was given on November 15 to permit the students to attend a launching at Pennellville.

Gas lighting was installed in North Winthrop, thus making it the "aristocratic end in college." An explosion at the gas works shut off the gas for several weeks.

An effort to establish a college glee club was under way.

Professor Carmichael and Instructor Robinson of the chemistry department announced that a six weeks' summer course in chemistry and mineralogy would be carried on in 1876 at a fee of $15 per student, plus breakage. "Board may be had at from $3 to $5 per week."

In football Bowdoin won from Andover, Exeter, Colby (twice), Bates and B. U.; tied Dartmouth, and lost only to B.A.A. Seven games were cancelled by Brown, Amherst, Tufts, Exeter and others, apparently because of the showing that Bowdoin made against Dartmouth.

The Garcelon will case on trial at San Francisco resulted in a victory for the College, and an addition of half a million dollars to its endowment funds. The heirs opposing the Col-

At the suggestion of Arthur G. Staples '82 of the Lewiston Journal, the Orient changed its format from two 8-inch to three 9-inch columns, and adopted a smaller type face. But it still maintained the quarto size and magazine form.

The sundial was again reinstalled.

The state football championship was a tie between Maine and Bowdoin.

The cross country team won from Boston College, but came in third in the state contest.

121 in the freshman class; total enrollment 400, a drop of 56 from a year earlier; 27 entered the medical school. Glenn Butler '23 was the college strong man; Rupert Johnson '24 second; Waldo Flinn '22, third. Godfrey's intercollegiate record of twenty-five years earlier still stood unequalled.

A straw ballot disclosed that the students were for Harding and Coolidge, the faculty for Cox and Roosevelt.

The new central heating and lighting plant (formerly the Union and before that the gymnasium) was put into operation.

The College acquired the Mustard House and remodeled it for bachelor members of the faculty.

Presented on behalf of the alumni by Leigh '14 and accepted by President Sills, the war memorial flagstaff was dedicated on Alumni Day. Students of pacifist sentiment had delayed the erection by removing the pole to the Chapel.

The Growler appeared for the Christmas houseparties.

In football Bowdoin won from Mass. State, Tufts, Maine, Wesleyan; tied Williams; lost to Colby and Bates.

The Observatory was removed to the edge of Pickard Field. Memorial Hall was remodeled inside.

Among seven new men on the faculty were: Kirkland, Daggett and Stallknecht.

The sundial was reinstalled.

The geology class took an all-day excursion to Orr's Island by horse-drawn "barge." The Orient said that "certain of the . . . party discovered . . . pearls . . . not . . . confined to the period of which Mrs. Stowe wrote."

Professor Files' home (later to become the Sigma Nu House) was nearing completion.

"Yaggers" tried to rush students who were singing at the Topsham fair. In the resulting fracas one freshman was arrested, but soon released.

In the annual physical examinations Godfrey '99 broke the intercollegiate strength record previously held by his brother of the class of '91. The new record stood for many years.

The custom of limiting to athletes the right to wear the B was coming in.

The old wooden trainshed and railroad station went up in smoke on the morning of October 31, just ahead of Halloween. It was a grand fire, enjoyed by everyone. The firemen appeared none too eager to quiet the flames.

The college attended almost en masse a concert by Paderewski in Portland—half-fare rates on the railroad.

The largest enrollment in the history of the College up to this time included 120 medical students and 243 undergraduates.

Phillips Mason joined the faculty. Paul E. More of Princeton was Cole lecturer on the Spirit and Poetry of Early New England. Professor Hormell returned from two semesters at Harvard.

THE big day when you finally get this beautiful button from Uncle Sam will come sooner or later, and when it does, you want to know the answers to many questions.

You want the "ungarbled word" in easy-to-read form, on the G. I. Bill of Rights, your National Service Life Insurance, how the job situation stacks up, and a lot more.

That is, you want all this dope if you're like the several hundred thousand other servicemen who've already been sent our little booklet,

"Information for Veterans," during the past year. They have asked for it from all over the world, from every fighting front.

Now that the job is done, they read it all the more eagerly while they are "sweating out" the wait for their return home. If you are a parent, wife or relative of a soon-to-be veteran, we shall be happy to provide a booklet for you to forward. If you are an officer who would like a supply for his unit, just name the quantity.

Address us at 501 Boylston St., Boston 17, Mass. We'll do the rest.

Addition of names herewith, brings the total number on Bowdoin's service list to 2,644. Four, who were previously listed as missing have now been declared dead, making a total of 86 gold stars. Five others are still listed as missing. It is feared that eventually those, too, must be added to our list of war dead.

The Alumni Office is duly appreciative of the help given by relatives of Bowdoin service men but we need that assistance now more than ever. Please continue to inform us when Bowdoin men in service change their ranks or stations, when they leave the service and what address should be put on college mail.

Let Us Heed Lincoln

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations."

Lincoln said this in 1865. Had Lincoln lived, reconstruction might have been a blessing, not a scourge.

The world is now facing reconstruction. Lincoln's words are pertinent in today's crisis and should be read and taken to heart at the beginning of every peace conference.

Professor Robert P. T. Coffin has been chosen for membership in the National Institute of Arts and Letters as recognition of works that "survive temporary appeal." Professor Coffin was one of six chosen from the field of literature.

Professor Edward Kirkland has been elected president of the Association of College and University Professors.

Associate Professor Newton P. Stallknecht is out of the Army and has returned to his teaching post at Bowdoin.

Professor Frederic Tillotson directed the Brunswick Choral Society's annual Christmas time presentation of Handel's "Messiah," which in addition to the orchestra included approximately 60 mixed voices. Earlier in the season Professor Tillotson was pianist with the Boston String Quartet at a concert in the series of the Brunswick Concert Association.

Thomas C. Van Cleve is on inactive status as a full colonel in the Reserve and has resumed teaching at Bowdoin. He received a War Department citation "for exceptional service to the Military Intelligence Service."

A testimonial banquet for Adam Walsh, the man who made gridiron history in his first season as a professional coach, was given upon his recent visit to Brunswick. The dinner was attended by approximately 500 of Adam's friends and included speeches by Governor Horace A. Hildreth, President Kenneth C. M. Sills, "Ducky" Pond, Mal Morrell, "Dinny" Shay, Conrad L. Drapeau, first selectman, and Fire Chief Harold E. Nickerson. Adam showed pictures of his famous Cleveland Rams in action. The banquet committee members reveal that the community honored Walsh the man rather than Walsh the coach.

The 141st Commencement

BOWDOIN'S first peacetime Commencement is certain to be a heavily attended occasion. Come strikes, crippled transportation, a Brunswick bulging at the seams, or what have you — Bowdoin sons are headed for the campus on June 7 and 8. Those classes scheduled for reunions are planning on unusually large numbers returning and other classes, whose regular reunions were prevented during the war years, are arranging class meetings and informal dinner gatherings. Hundreds of alumni, recently separated from service, have placed Commencement high on the summer's agenda. Some have already begun the trek to Bowdoin. None appear the least bit disturbed over the acute shortage of sleeping quarters — "Why sleep anyway; too much to do and too many to see."

Eager as always to greet her returning sons, Bowdoin is doing everything humanly possible to make them welcome. The Bursar's staff is combing the campus and town for available quarters. The many veterans in the student body — reluctant to leave the campus at the conclusion of examinations as is the wont of most undergraduate groups — say they will be here to greet their buddies and will double up somehow to make room for them. The spirit is that of Bowdoin's time-honored cordiality. The College asks her guests to recognize the handicaps in the way of extending all the physical evidences of the hospitality usually to be offered.

The program here printed indicates a return to normal times. Those attending the graduating exercises will hear once again Commencement parts delivered by seniors; a distinguished group of honorary degree recipients will parade with the Faculty, whose ranks are already amplified by members returning from war service. In addition to the customary annual meetings there may be noted the organization meeting of the Bowdoin Fathers Association, virile newcomer to the list of Bowdoin supporters. To find room for alumni, the Commencement Dinner moves to the Hyde Athletic Building while the Society of Bowdoin Women takes over the Gym floor.

Rejoicing over the cessation of fighting, Bowdoin does not forget her warring sons. Commencement Day begins with a memorial service for the war dead. As President Sills states, "It seems appropriate, on the day when so many will be coming back to the campus, that the first thoughts of the College should be of the gallant unreturning."

Marsh '12, Brunswick.

After paying warm tribute to George F. Cressey '12, whose long services to the College were terminated with his untimely death on February 2, President Richard S. Chapman welcomed the Council members to constructive participation in the problems which Bowdoin faces, and introduced the President of the College.

In his report on the State of the College, President Sills described the acute situations created by the early termination of the war and the sudden influx of students. The present enrolment of about 550—60% of them veterans—was likely to increase to 750 this summer if housing for married veterans can be found. Bowdoin expects to be host to students from Colby, Bates, Haverford and Swarthmore, which colleges are not holding summer sessions. Next fall the demand for admission is expected to reach a peak and the College is frankly puzzled how to meet it. The applications of service men are receiving special attention. Priority will be given to former students and to those already formally admitted, but every effort will be made to admit 125 to 150 boys coming up from preparatory schools.

Return to the normal college year is still some years away. Despite the fact that Bowdoin will have more applicants than can be admitted, the valuable recruiting service rendered by alumni will be needed that Bowdoin may pick the best of the material. Veterans continue to make good college citizens—in class and out.

President Sills stated that he expects soon to call a conference of faculty, undergraduate and alumni representatives of fraternities to discuss the criticism aimed at fraternities and the matter of reconversion. Because of increased tuition income and the mounting support of alumni through the Alumni Fund, the expected college operating deficit might not materialize.

Thanking the Council members for their interest in Bowdoin's perplexing problems, President Sills said that a college must have continuity and flexibility. With continued alumni help, Bowdoin would go on but would be ready to change at any moment.

At 8:30 P.M. the Council assembled in Massachusetts Hall and proceeded at once to consideration of the first major topic of the session, Phases of Undergraduate Life. Dean Nixon and Acting Dean Kendrick led a frank discussion of the few existing college rules, the occasional abuses of undergraduate freedom, and the methods used to control those abuses while encouraging development from boyhood to manhood through assumption of responsibility. Past President James E. Longley and present Vice-President Ira Pitcher of the Student Council discussed the topic from the undergraduate point of view. Donovan D. Lancaster, Manager of the Moulton Union, outlined a proposal for cooperative management of fraternity dining services under supervision of a responsible college officer. Each speaker was questioned by Council members and a lengthy discussion, which brought forth a wide range of opinions, followed. The Council voted that:

The fraternity system at Bowdoin is good for the College.

There is no apparent need for more chapters at this time.

PRESIDENT CHAPMAN '28, SAWYER '27, HALFORD '07

Private ownership as opposed to college ownership of fraternity house property should be continued.

The Council expresses confidence in the middle course between paternalism and laissez-faire as outlined by the Dean and believes the Administration's present policy of supervision of fraternity life may be relied upon to check excesses.

The advantages of a plan for co-operative buying and centralized management should be given careful consideration by the fraternities and the College. College collection of charges for room and board should be provided if the fraternities want it.

The present early rushing and initiation appear satisfactory.

The session was adjourned at 10:45 P.M.

Saturday morning's session was devoted to the Admissions and Public Relations Policies of the College. Professor Edward S. Hammond, Director of Admissions, surveyed the admissions experience of recent years and the sudden increase in applications during the past few weeks. Former students and formally admitted freshmen, returning from service, must be given first priority. The College will also make places for preparatory school graduates to the number of 125 to 150. It is practically impossible to give much hope for admission to others but alumni assistance is wanted and needed that we get the best possible group of entering students. Requirements will be higher than during the war.

Professor Hammond reported that the Secondary School Committee of the Faculty was recommending that an assistant to the Director of Admissions be added to the college staff, a full time officer with varied public relations duties who would coordinate the activities of alumni and the College in interesting preparatory school students.

Malcolm E. Morrell, Director of Athletics, admitted that hope for the return of Adam Walsh to his coaching duties was waning but held high hopes for the results which Coach "Dinny" Shay would produce. Successful college athletics are inseparably a part of college public relations. It is not Bowdoin policy or practice to subsidize players on teams but we can and should do all we can to equip our athletics-for-all program with needed teachers and facilities and to encourage promising students to come to Bowdoin. Mr. Morrell endorsed the plan for an assistant in the admissions department—particularly his work in schools and with schoolboys. He warned the Council that Bowdoin's prospects for athletic victories in the immediate future could not be too bright when one views the increases of student enrollment at colleges with whom we compete. Among the needs of the Physical Education Department Mr. Morrell named more teaching personnel, provision in the college class schedule for a properly supervised athletic program, repairs to the Gym, the Swimming Pool and the Cage, improved bleachers at Whittier Field and in the Gym, a covered hockey rink and a squash court building. Claiming no priority for his department, Mr. Morrell pointedly asked why Bowdoin should not organize a major money-raising effort to provide at least some of its real needs.

Professor Herbert R. Brown discussed public relations in the light of the college publications of recent years—the catalogue, pictorial booklet, Sesquicentennial brochure and the question and answer booklet, Bowdoin After the War. Through these publications, and visits by members of the staff, Bowdoin's story is reaching more prospective students and their teachers. Professor Brown urged alumni to assist in arranging these visits and stressed the importance of the invitation from the school or local group. He does not favor a full time Publicity Director but admits the College might profit from more newspaper publicity. College news might well clear through some member of the English Department. One value might be the keeping some news items out of the papers.

Professor Albert R. Thayer called attention to the publicity value of athletic events, debates, musical club appearances and preparatory school contests in track, dramatics and debating. Prof. Thayer suggested more and larger pre-matriculation scholarships. Competition for good students makes advisable perhaps ten such annual awards of $1000 each.

Many questions were asked of the several speakers and a lengthy discussion of several phases of the topic for the session was had.

Vote of the Council was passed as follows:

The Council does not favor the appointment of a full-time Publicity Director but does believe it would be advantageous to the College to designate a member of the staff through whom news releases should clear to representatives of the press.

The Council recognizes and appreciates the services to Bowdoin rendered over a period of years by Harry Shulman, local Associated Press representative, expresses their thanks for this service and instructs the Council President to so inform Mr. Shulman.

The Council approves the plans of the College to seek qualified entering students from wider areas and to make provision for the enrollment of more boys from families economically unable to finance college courses.

The Council looks with favor on Prof. Thayer's proposal for additional pre-matriculation scholarships.

The Council votes its approval and endorsement of the secondary school committee's proposed plan for an assistant to the Director of Admissions and the coordination of efforts to interest schoolboys in Bowdoin and to see that the best of them are admitted.

The Council applauds and approves the elastic policy of the Administration in the matter of the size of the student body during the present emergency. The Council further recommends that the Administration continue to use Bowdoin's teaching and housing facilities to the fullest that education of value to the student be made available to every qualified veteran and school-boy applicant for whom a place may be made.

Wise practice would seem to require that all scholarships be awarded by a single committee with such sub-committees as may be needed.

The Council recognizes the joint and several obligations of its members to further Bowdoin publicity in their respective local areas and to assist in securing invitations for the appearance of Bowdoin speakers.

The session was adjourned at 12 o'clock noon.

An exceedingly pleasant interlude was provided when the members of the Council were the guests of President and Mrs. Sills for luncheon at 85 Federal Street.

The final Council session was held Saturday afternoon. It was devoted largely to a discussion of An Appropriate War Memorial. Following a statement by Mr. Longley as to the desires of the student body, the Council reviewed the known needs of the College, both tangible and intangible, agreed that an early selection of a memorial was imperative, and passed the following vote:

The Memorial established for Bowdoin men who lost their lives in this war should also be a memorial to those Bowdoin men lost in all wars; that the memorial should be tangible, useful and one meeting an admitted physical need of the College.

The Council discussion then veered toward Bowdoin's many needs. Members pointed to the active efforts at other colleges and agreed that a major money-raising effort at Bowdoin should not be longer delayed. After some discussion of the possible part which the Alumni Fund might take in such an effort, it was voted that:

The Alumni Council believes that Bowdoin should at once become active in the organized solicitation of substantial sums to provide for its obvious needs. The Executive Committee of the Council is authorized to draft a suggested plan for such an undertaking and to present it to the Governing Boards at their June, 1946, meetings with the urgent request of the Council for prompt consideration.

Voting the first campus meeting of the entire Council a wholly pleasant and profitable event, one which should occur annually, the Council adjourned at 3:30 P.M.

Pursuant to the vote of the Alumni Council, the Executive Committee met in Boston on April 11 and prepared a memorandum suggesting the possible scope of a major money raising program which the Committee believed the Alumni and friends of the College would endorse and support. The memorandum, which was addressed to the Visiting and the Postwar Planning Committees of the Boards and mailed to all Board members, recommended an immediate active effort to raise the sum of $7,300,000. Included in this total were $2,800,000 to erect needed buildings, $4,000,000 for maintenance funds and additions to the endowment of the College and $500,000 to provide new pre-matriculation scholarships amounting to $1000 each.

The Council Executive Committee urged that the Committees addressed undertake at once preliminary studies which would enable the Governing Boards to take positive action at their June meetings.

Bowdoin In The News

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following account of a significant occasion was submitted to the ALUMNUS by John W. Frost '04.

Bowdoin men who are members of The University Club of New York tendered a dinner on April 29 to Earle S. Thompson '14 on the occasion of his retiring from the presidency of The University Club. Mr. Thompson, President of American Water Works and Electric Company, was elected President of The University Club in 1943, and has headed the institution for three war years.

The University Club, now in its eighty-second year, is made up of about thirty-five hundred male graduates of American universities and colleges, and has always been presided over by persons distinguished in American business and professional life, past presidents having included Thomas W. Lamont, George W. Wickersham, Esq., Theodore William Dwight, Dr. Michael I. Pupin and others. Mr. Thompson is the first Bowdoin graduate to head The University Club.

Those attending were: Hoyt A. Moore '95, Harvey D. Gibson '02, Harrison K. McCann '02, George R. Walker '02, George W. Burpee '04, John W. Frost '04, Harry L. Palmer '04, Walter K. Wildes '04, Roscoe H. Hupper '07, Arthur H. Huse '08, Harrison Atwood '09, Joseph C. White '11, Cedric R. Crowell '13, Hon. Sumner T. Pike '13, Ralph L. Barrett '16, Adriel U. Bird '16, Lloyd O. Coulter '18, Bela W. Norton '18, James H. Halpin '26, and Frederick Hasler H'43.

At the dinner Mr. Thompson was presented with a copy of Mencken's The American Language, Supplement One, inscribed by all those present, with the inscription "Vir magnus, magno dilectus amore," a free translation of which was explained by the toastmaster as "A long fellow whom we much love." Letters were read from Supreme Court Justice Harold H. Burton '09, U. S. District Court Judge John A. Peters '85, Governor Horace Hildreth '25 of Maine, Major Gen. Wallace C. Philoon '05, Dr. Rufus E. Stetson '08, and others. For the occasion Professor Robert P. Tristram Coffin '15 composed and sent an occasional poem which follows:

For EARLE THOMPSON

With affectionate greetings on the occasion of the University Dinner, April 29, 1946

WHITE PINE

STRAIGHT Tree, tree of the State of Maine,

*Tree of the clean and toughest grain,
White tree that bore Maine's honesty
To the far corners of the sea
In ships for a hundred of clean years,
Tree that grows straighter as it clears
The lesser trees in its green climb, Whose wood grows sounder with old time—*

This is the tree which made the white Houses of Maine, four-square and right.

And this is the tree which comes to mind

When one thinks of Earle Thompson's kind.

Earle, the keen and clean, the strong Man honest as the day is long.

He has carried the Maine State strength,

*The stout endurance, down the length
Of our country and built his health
Into the American commonwealth.*

*Earle has clearly won the right
To the name of a tall man and a white.*

Another Bowdoin son, Col. Lowell A. Elliott '16, has been awarded the War Department Distinguished Service Medal, recognition accorded only to those without whose services the war would have been lost. The presentation was made April 26, 1946, by Major General Alden H. Waitt, Chief of CWS, at Washington headquarters, where Colonel Elliott is Deputy Chief of CWS, and where, on April 4, he had received the Legion of Merit for overseas wartime service.

The DSM citation reads: "Col. Lowell A. Elliott performed meritorious and distinguished service as Deputy Chief of Chemical Warfare Service from May 1943 to March 1946. Assignment of key personnel in this country and all foreign theaters was under his direction, and he controlled the policies and operations of the counter-intelligence program of Chemical Warfare Service. He coordinated much of the preparedness program concerning toxic and bacteriological methods when security maintenance was so vital in that field. The organizational and executive ability, experience and technical knowledge of Colonel Elliott greatly aided the war effort."

Colonel Elliott rose from the ranks. He enlisted as a private in September 1917 and has remained in the army continuously since then. He assisted in the manufacture of the first gas masks made in the United States, was transferred to the Gas Defense Division, Sanitary Corps, soon after its organization. In March of the following year, while a sergeant first-class, he was commissioned first lieutenant. When the Chemical Warfare Service absorbed the Gas Defense Division and became a part of the regular army, Colonel Elliott was retained in the new service. He became a captain in 1931, major in 1939, lieutenant colonel in 1941 and a full colonel early in 1942.

Colonel Elliott was graduated from the Chemical Warfare School at Edgewood Arsenal in 1922 and saw subsequent duty in the Philippines, with the Cavalry School. He was a member of a military delegation to Brazil, and in World War II served in the North African and European theaters of operation.

W. Hodding Carter, Jr. '27, author and publisher of the Greenville, Mississippi, Delta Democrat-Times, was vacationing at his Rockport summer home where he learned that he had been awarded the 1945 Pulitzer Prize for editorial writing. The prize winning editorials were a series on social, religious and economic tolerance. After a year of teaching at Tulane University, Carter started an anti-Huey Long daily in Hammond, La., which newspaper he sold to Long's associates subsequent to the senator's assassination. With the profits he launched the consolidated Greenville newspapers. In 1939 he won a Nieman Fellowship at Harvard. In 1942 he wrote The Lower Mississippi for Farrar and Reinhardt's Rivers of America series. Last year he published a novel, Winds of Fear, a story of the racial situation in the South and he is now working on a sequel, Flood Crest. He won a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1945 to complete a treatise on the establishment of the Western Florida Republic. Short stories, verse and magazine articles from his pen appear frequently. During the war he served five years in the Army, part of the time in the Middle East as editor of the Yanks and Stars and Stripes.

Hodding Carter is a Southerner who can and does speak his mind to Southerners about their problems and what should be done about them. But he likes Maine and plans to spend his summers here.

On The Campus

Music

THE last few weeks of Prof. Tillotson's ten years of music at Bowdoin have been characterized by intense musical activity. On Saturday, April 28, the Brunswick Choral Society and the Harvard-Pierian-Radcliffe Orchestra presented the Brahms Requiem and the Faure Requiem as a memorial to Dr. Charles T. Burnett. Professor Tillotson conducted the Faure number. With violinist Harrison Keller and a string quartet, Professor Tillotson was the pianist in appearances at Groton School, Bowdoin and Colby on successive evenings in May. The concert here was the final event of the Concert Association program. The College Choir, the Glee Club and the Meddiebempsters have appeared regularly at college and away—notably at the annual dinner of the Bowdoin Club of Boston, at Lincoln Academy and on the broadcasts of Bowdoin on the Air.

The crowning musical event of the year was the Bowdoin Night at the Boston Symphony Pops on May 13. The overwhelmingly Bowdoin audience was enthusiastic in their reception of the Bowdoin contributions to the program—Professor Tillotson's rendition of the piano concerto of Shostakovich, the baritone solo of Lloyd Knight '45 and the numbers presented by the fifty-four members of the Glee Club.

Appropriately, the musically eventful years of Professor Tillotson's work here have been recognized by the publication of an issue of the College Bulletin entitled "Ten Years of Music at Bowdoin College".

Bowdoin On The Air

THE Bowdoin-on-the-Air broadcasts over Station WGAN are continuing this trimester. Reneud and Bertrand des Clers, French exchange students, and Ulf Store of Norway discussed the European underground movement in which they were active in a roundtable led by Weinstein '47 on March 13. On April 20, Roger Williams and "Vin" Sotak sang. Caras and Pray represented Bowdoin in a debate with Bates College on April 4 on the Bates College broadcasts over WGAN. Professor Tillotson directed the Bowdoin College Choir in the singing of three special Easter hymns on the program of April 16. A scene from A Dark Horse of A Different Color by Edwin L. Vergason '39 was presented by the Masque and Gown on April 30. Prof. Quinby introduced the four players, Wadman '49, Tronerud '45, Coughlan '49, and Mrs. Emerson Zeitler. John Thomas directed the Meddiebempsters in a program of brand-new songs on Tuesday, May 7; Lee Jackson announced. Professor Gross will present another interesting talk on birds the last week in May.

Dramatics

THE College was host to the fourteenth annual high school one-act play contest on April 13. These contests, bringing to the campus dramatic coaches and actors from all parts of the State, are sponsored by the Preparatory School Committee. The College provides a panel of judges; entertains the contestants at dinner and, if necessary, overnight; and awards trophies to the winner and runner-up. The stage in Memorial Hall is set up and properties are provided by the Masque and Gown production crew, who work for the Preparatory School Committee. This year was marked by a particularly happy speech of welcome to the contestants by President Sills and by the formation of an Association of High School Dramatic Coaches, who have been invited to hold their annual meetings at the College in connection with contests in years to come. The contests also permit a meeting of the college dramatic directors of the State since the judges are drawn, whenever possible, from Bates, Colby, and the University of Maine.

On April 25, the try-out of A Dark Horse of a Different Color, a new farce comedy by Edwin L. Vergason '39, was held in Memorial Hall. It is the thirteenth full-length Bowdoin-written play to be tried out by the Masque and Gown, the second by an alumnus. Cast with a large percentage of returned service men and their wives, the play was warmly received. It was repeated on May 16 for the Ivy Houseparty.

For commencement The Comedy of Errors, recently popularized on the professional stage as The Boys from Syracuse, will be revived for the first time since 1933. Its two pairs of twins and its gay inconsequence should bring a carefree note to the first post-war Commencement.

Athletics

SINCE the last issue of the Alumnus there have been some changes in the Athletic Department. Coach Neil Mahoney decided to accept a full time position with the Boston Red Sox and so resigned from Bowdoin. A few days later, Lt. Comdr. Linn S. Wells, who had been on leave of absence in the Navy since the summer of 1942, notified the college that he had decided to remain in the Navy and so he, too, resigned from Bowdoin. The College was very fortunate in being able to acquire the services of Daniel K. MacFayden as coach of baseball and hockey.

MacFayden is a veteran of sixteen years of major league baseball, which includes ten years with the Red Sox and Yankees. He has had many years of coaching experience and has already sold himself to the baseball men. He is as much of an expert in hockey as he is in baseball and the enthusiasm for this sport has grown decidedly since his arrival on the campus. So far the baseball team has won from Maine, Bates and Tufts and has lost to Colby and Bates. Regardless of final results this year, we know MacFayden will get the most from his material and the boys will learn baseball and hockey.

Coach Magee has developed a good track team. It defeated Maine in a dual meet and won the State Meet at Lewiston, May 11.

The golf team, coached by Bob Miller, has won its two matches to date, defeating Amherst and Maine, and Dinny Shay's tennis team has won its only intercollegiate match up to this time, also defeating Maine. On Saturday, May 4, Bowdoin's track, baseball, golf and tennis teams competed and won. It is doubtful if we can maintain any such average but it is good that we are able to have teams again in all sports.

Reunions

THE Class of 1896 reports that at least seventeen of the living twenty-three members will be present for their fiftieth reunion. The program includes a luncheon for members and their ladies, in the Union at noon on Friday, June 7 and a stag dinner at Miller's Inn, Harpswell at 6:30 p.m. Class headquarters will be in the Moulton Union. Henry W. Owen, Jr., is reunion chairman.

1901 will establish headquarters at the Harriet Beecher Stowe House on Federal Street, although that newest of Brunswick hostelries will not be officially open to the public. Class Secretary Tink Sanborn and Harold Berry hope to provide overnight accommodations there for most of those returning. Despite the death of Zube Swett, the Class dinner will be held at Lakewood, as in 1941, at the insistence of Mrs. Swett. Members of 1901 families are included and a large attendance is expected.

Prevented from celebrating their fortieth in 1943 the Class of 1903 plans to gather at the Auburn Colony in Harpswell on Friday, June 7, for a clambake. Overnight accommodations will be available to those not otherwise provided for. Farrington Abbott and Secretary Clement Robinson are the committee.

1906 expects a large returning number at the fortieth reunion. Secretary Ralph Webber is arranging. Headquarters will be in North Hyde Hall.

Thirty-fifth reunion headquarters for 1911 will be at Jack Magee's on Boody Street. Chairman William H. Clifford plans the class dinner at the Eagle Hotel.

1916 will stage another of its famed gatherings. Paul K. Niven and Dwight Sayward are co-chairmen. Thirtieth reunion headquarters will open at Pickard Field House on Wednesday, June 5 at 5:00 p.m. The committee and early arrivals will dine there and hold an informal greeting party that evening. Thursday, June 6 is a full day, highlighted by a class reception and tea from 5:00 to 6:15 p.m. for members of the Boards, the Faculty, the Alumni Council, the Fund Directors and their ladies. The class and their families journey by bus to Mere Point for a picnic and dancing, returning for an informal late snack at headquarters. A campus program at Memorial Hall is planned if weather is inclement.

On Friday, June 7, buses will carry the party to Bailey's Island for a midday boat trip around Casco Bay. After the reception by President and Mrs. Sills, the group leaves for Poland Spring where the class banquet will be held in the Mansion House. The day closes with another informal late party at the Field House. On Saturday, members of the class attend Commencement exercises, their families the Society of Bowdoin Women dinner. Rooms are being provided in Hyde Hall, with overflow accommodations at nearby cottages. A committee headed by Mrs. Niven and Mrs. Sayward is arranging entertainment for ladies, sons and daughters. Those who were on campus in 1941 saw a 25th reunion so complete and so efficiently conducted as to confound other reunion committees. 1916's thirtieth bids fair to excel their previous record.

1921 expects about fifty on campus for the 25th. Moore Hall will be the class headquarters with assembly facilities in the basement. The class dinner will be held at the Gurnet House on Friday evening. Alex Standish is chairman of the committee which includes Sanger Cook, Ducky Holmes and Lloyd Hatch.

1922 is holding a preliminary to their 25th next year. Cocktails at Al Morrell's precede a class dinner at Miller's Inn.

Les Claff and Leon Spinney head the committee for 1926 whose twentieth will bring about forty members back. Headquarters are in Appleton Hall.

1931 has fifteenth headquarters in Appleton and will hold the class dinner at the Lookout Point House in Harpswell. Elias Thomas and Lyman Cousens are the committee.

The ten year class holds forth at Maine Hall. George Monell reports that more than fifty of 1936 are expected. The class dinner and an all-day outing will be held at the Bath Country Club on Friday, June 7.

Bob Martin reports that 1941 has not yet settled down but that he confidently expects that nearly 100 will register. Headquarters are in Winthrop Hall. A softball game with 1936 is planned for Friday forenoon.

THE rare book room at Hubbard Hall, which came to the College largely because of an anonymous donor's gift, is completed and now houses some of Bowdoin's literary treasures. Returning alumni should not fail to see this richly appointed addition to the Library equipment.

OUR February cover picture has aroused considerable interest in the identity of the members of 1866. Dr. Wallace W. Anderson H'42 presented the picture to the College. He had received it from his aunt who identified her father, C. S. Boardman. Kent Packard '08 has identified for us his father, Rev. George T. Packard. Eben W. Freeman, Esq. '85 has undertaken to complete the list of names of those who appear in the picture. He will appreciate hearing from anyone who can assist him. Mr. Freeman's address is 95 Exchange Street, Portland, Maine.

WE are indebted to Mr. S. S. Visher of Indiana University for a list of Bowdoin names which will appear in a biographical volume recognizing the work of eminent American scientists. Bowdoin men included are: Alpheus S. Packard '61, Frederick H. Gerrish '66, Charles O. Whitman '68, M. E. Wadsworth '69, A. H. Sabin '76, Preston Kyes '96, Laurence Irving '16, A. C. Kinsey '16, and C. P. Rhoads '20.

THE College has received from Roy A. Foulke '19 some interesting and valuable items of Bowdoin memorabilia. They include three original Bowdoin signatures, one of James Bowdoin, Sr., and two of his sons, the latter appended to long hand documents of about 200 years ago. All are in a remarkable state of preservation.

Alumni Associations and Clubs

AUGUSTA

President Samuel H. Slosberg '30 presided when forty-one members of the Kennebec Alumni Association assembled for the annual meeting at the Augusta House on Thursday, April 18. Herbert F. Locke '12 reported on the Alumni Council meeting in Brunswick. The Alumni Secretary and Placement Director Ladd spoke briefly and Acting Dean Nathaniel C. Kendrick described conditions at the College, stressing particularly the difficulties facing the Admissions Office. Not a few alumni were certain to be disappointed because places could not be found for all alumni endorsed prospective students. Professor Kendrick urged alumni, nevertheless, to continue their valuable work among preparatory school boys that Bowdoin might select the best possible entering group. Professor Van Cleve's recital of some of his experiences as an Intelligence Officer in the war held the rapt attention of his audience. Speaking entirely off the record, Professor Van Cleve spoke in detail of his personal participation in little known events of the North African and European campaigns.

At the business session the following officers were elected: President, Gardner K. Heath '09; 1st Vice-President, Sewall S. Webster '10; 2nd Vice-President, Emery O. Beane '04; Secretary and Treasurer, Frank E. Southard, Jr. '36. To succeed Charles A. Knight '96, resigned, William B. Williamson '14 was elected the club's representative member of the Alumni Council.

BOSTON

Nearly 200 members of the Boston Alumni Association attended the annual meeting at the Statler Hotel on Thursday, April 11. Following the report of Symphony "Pops" Committee chairman, James F. Claverie '10, to the effect that the May 13 event was a complete sellout and a brief response from Alumni Secretary Seward J. Marsh '12, President Noel W. Deering '25 introduced the Hon. Clarence A. Barnes, Attorney General of Massachusetts. Paying tribute to the late Alfred B. White '98, his former law partner, Mr. Barnes spoke feelingly of the valuable contribution made to our national life and economy by the old colleges of the country, mentioning in particular Bowdoin and his own college, Yale. He stated that, while big corporations and a handful of their leaders may have been masters of the government forty years ago, today the money-loaded bosses of big labor unions are the masters of government and their abuses of the power they have seized are the reasons for many of America's ills.

President Sills, appearing before the Boston Club as head of the College for the 30th consecutive time, gave his customary report on the state of the College. He predicted that crowded conditions now prevalent at all men's colleges would exist for a long time, that the return of normal college years as we have known them are still far in the future. Reminding the alumni that three-fifths of today's undergraduates were veterans and that the proportion would be four-fifths next fall, the President asked all alumni to consider the possible implications of a situation where nearly all the students were receiving their education at government expense. Will there develop a demand that all boys should receive that financial assistance and what of the independent colleges if it does come about? President Sills repeated his previous announcements that Bowdoin would go on maintaining her high standards but that the Administration would keep the College flexible, ready to meet changing conditions on short notice.

Officers elected for 1946-47 were: President, John W. Tarbell '26; 1st Vice-President, Harold W. Davie '10; 2nd Vice-President, William P. Sawyer '36; Secretary, Theodore L. Fowler '24; Assistant Secretary, Richard C. Hanson '41; Treasurer, Edward F. Chase '38; Assistant Treasurer, Roy W. McNiven '41.

CHICAGO

The annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Chicago was held at Mandel's on Monday, April 8. Present were: Cushing '05, Duddy '07, Emerson '11, Newell '12, Kroll '25, Graves '28, Cramer '32, Rutherford '36, Rundlett '38, Long '44 and his father, A. S. Long, Chicago '09. Secretary Joseph H. Newell '12 presided and gave an account of the Placement Committee's activities. Walter Emerson '11, the club's member of the Alumni Council, gave an interesting report of the Council meeting at Brunswick in March. He said that alumni were placed in a somewhat difficult position by being urged to encourage boys to attend Bowdoin while compelled to inform those boys that they probably could not be admitted. In agreement with most of the Council's conclusions, Emerson believes that an appropriate War Memorial should not be tangible but rather the establishment of a course to teach young men the futility of war and to educate them in the ways of preventing war. Several present agreed with this recommendation. Professor E. A. Duddy '07 was elected President and Walter N. Emerson '11 was chosen Secretary and re-elected to the Alumni Council. The Secretary's address is 7 South Dearborn Street, Chicago 3, Illinois. He would like to hear from all Bowdoin men who have come to the area.

MINNEAPOLIS

The Bowdoin Club of Minnesota met at the Minneapolis Athletic Club on Thursday, April 11, with the following present; Kendrie '10, Knapp M'17, Grant M'20, Cobb '26; Laidley '36, Stinchfield H'37, and Nash '38. Donovan D. Lancaster '27, Manager of the Moulton Union, represented the College and led the evening's informal discussion of conditions at Bowdoin. Considerable time was spent in reviewing the report of the Alumni Council but the question and answer program covered a wide range of topics concerning the College. As a matter of interest, every man present was himself from the State of Maine or the son of parents who were. Secretary Nathan A. Cobb '26 believes there are several Bowdoin alumni who have recently come to Minnesota. He would like to hear from them at his address, 1430 Rand Tower, Minneapolis, Minnesota.

NEWARK

The Bowdoin Club of New Jersey met at Yauch's in Newark on Friday, March 29. Twenty members of the club listened with interest to a report of the Alumni Council meeting on the campus, March 8 and 9, given by Sanford B. Cousins '20, Council member at large. The dinner meeting was the twelfth anniversary of the club's organization. Officers elected were: President, Roderick L. Perkins '21; Vice-President, Carl A. Powers '09; Secretary and Treasurer, Howard S. Hall '31. Andrew M. Rollins '19 continues as the Alumni Council representative member. The Secretary's address is 151 Irving Avenue, South Orange, N. J.

PITTSBURGH

The annual dinner meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Western Pennsylvania was held at the Duquesne Club on Friday, April 12. Ten members and Headmaster Lowell Innes of Shadyside Academy were present to greet Professor Edward S. Hammond, Director of Admissions, who described the Bowdoin of these peacetime days and mentioned some of the puzzling problems which the sudden increase of students present. President Frederick W. Willey '17 reported at length upon the Alumni Council meeting at Brunswick which he attended in March. At the business session the club voted a contribution to the Alumni Fund. John D. Dupuis '29 was elected President, Geoffrey T. Mason '23 Secretary and Treasurer, and Fred W. Willey '17 representative member of the Alumni Council. The Secretary's address is 20 Thorn Street, Sewickley, Pa. He hopes all newcomers to the area will contact him.

PORTLAND

About 100 members attended the annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Portland at the Cumberland Club on Wednesday, May 22. Presiding in the absence of President George O. Cummings '13, Hon. William M. Ingraham '94, first president of the club, gave an entertaining description of the meetings of the predecessor Alumni Association. He stated that, although the Poem and the Oration always deemed necessary were ably delivered by distinguished members, the programs of those days constituted "long, hard evenings." George E. Beal '16 read the report of the nominating committee. Officers elected were: President, Charles L. Hildreth '25 and Secretary-treasurer, Stanley H. Low '35. The new president responded in light vein to Mr. Ingraham's introduction. Referring to the row of Democrats at his right and the group of Republicans on his left, he stated that a Hildreth was naturally confused to discover such probable sources of support.

President Sills was the only speaker of the evening. He spoke at some length concerning (1) the students who had returned to College from the service, (2) the serious situation facing the schoolboys seeking college training and (3) the teaching staff at Bowdoin. The veterans are steady and serious; they know what they want. Pressure upon the colleges from veterans applying for admission will not be temporary; graduating schoolboys may face delays and possibly a quota system in their efforts to continue their education. The Bowdoin Faculty has been strengthened by the return of several members from war services and by the addition of some outstanding new men. During the summer session the College will have the services of teachers from other colleges.

Asking the continued help of the Alumni in finding the best qualified boys, despite the likelihood that some could not be admitted for lack of housing space, President Sills emphasized the importance to Bowdoin of alumni interest and support. Mentioning as a clear cut example of the loyal Bowdoin supporter, the late George F. Cressey '12, former president of the club and member at large of the Alumni Council, he asked that the members present give a moment's thought to the host of devoted Bowdoin sons who had gone. The President requested the active support of all college men and women in the effort to place the teaching profession on a sounder base. He stated that teachers, with their skills and years of special study, were entitled to at least as high an income as that of unskilled laborers.

In closing, President Sills expressed a real hope that the Boards would approve a substantial number of promotions and salary increases which he had recommended and read a list of eleven Bowdoin teachers who had taught at the College for 40 years or longer. They were: Parker Cleveland, 53 years; Alpheus S. Packard, 65 years; William Smyth, 45 years; Thomas C. Upham, 43 years; Henry L. Chapman, 45 years; Henry Johnson, 41 years; William A. Moody, 42 years; Charles C. Hutchins, 42 years; Wilmot B. Mitchell, 46 years; Roscoe J. Ham, 43 years; Charles T. Burnett, 40 years.

Following a period of questions, the meeting adjourned at 9:30 p.m.

ST. PETERSBURG

Members of the Bowdoin Club of St. Petersburg were guests of Albert S. Ridley '90 at a delightful luncheon meeting at the Hotel Princess Martha on Wednesday, February 6, following a preliminary round of tales and cocktails in the lounge. Although Bowdoin has never been co-educational, a few women have received honorary degrees and a large number, even more loyal, have married Bowdoin men. Some of the latter group graced the party. Present were: Albert S. Ridley '90, W. R. "Cos" Smith

A second luncheon meeting of the club was held at the Hotel Princess Martha on Wednesday, March 13. The Secretary, Dr. Charles S. F. Lincoln '90, had vigorously rounded up a number who had recently come south. Attending were: Howard '93, Lyford '96, Webber '95, Leslie M'01, Sinkinson '02, Ridley '90, Aldred '24, Lincoln '91, Richardson '09, Nutter M'92, Call M'04, Smith '90, Niven '16 and E. R. Comee Tufts '15. There were no speakers, the three hour meeting being devoted entirely to informal discussion of Bowdoin affairs.

SKOWHEGAN

On Thursday, February 28, sixteen

Somerset County members gathered at the Skowhegan House, the guests of Harry L. Palmer '04 who had recently returned from Red Cross service in England. Convener Carleton P. Merrill '96 presided over an informal but interesting discussion of topics to be considered at the Alumni Council sessions on March 8 and 9. A thoroughly enjoyable as well as an instructive evening was reported. Officers elected for the ensuing year are Harry L. Palmer '04, President, and Brooks E. Savage '24, Secretary and Treasurer.

WASHINGTON

The annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Washington was a distinguished gathering. Presiding was Supreme Court Justice Harold H. Burton '09. Among those attending were Secretary of War Patterson H

'42, U. S. Senator Leverett Saltonstall H'40, Major Paul Douglas '13 and his wife, Representative Emily Taft Douglas of Illinois, Austin H. After hearing representatives of both colleges, early in the year the executive committee of the State Baseball Association awarded to Bowdoin the previous year's baseball pennant. The matter had been in controversy ever since the close of the season.

"Some beautiful students from Wellesley College passed through the depot about a week since, and created quite a sensation."

Daniel Pratt, the "Great American Traveler", made his last visit to the campus. Gurdjian '77, disposed of many prints of his photograph of Daniel addressing a large group of students on organic laws, ventilation, perspiration, inspiration, inflation and concatenation.

"Songs of Bowdoin" issued from the press at a price of seventy-five cents.

The rage for chess seemed to be dying out.

The Faculty refused petitions for holidays on Washington's Birthday and May Day.

The Orient advocated the idea of having a neat and well-kept billiard hall in town.

Orient advertisements included a cancer cure, phrenology lessons, "segars".

The principal events at the Field Day on Saturday were: a hurdle race (distance unstated); a two-mile walk and a half-mile walk; a three-legged race; running broad jump (17 ft. 4 in.); standing broad jump; standing high jump; 100-yard dash (11 seconds); a potato race and a wheelbarrow race.

The burial of analytics ("Anna") on July 5 ended the college year.

The worst flood in the century cut off railroad communication, milk deliveries, electric lights and mail for several days. The Brunswick town meeting was postponed. All recitations were cancelled when the flood was at its height.

President Hyde advised the students to devote their Sundays to "acquiring an acquaintance with the world's great men through their books." Cooperatively, Professor Little bulletined a list of desirable Sunday reading, and permitted students to take these books out over Sunday regardless of the standard limit of three books per man.

The Science Building and Memorial Hall were lighted with gasoline.

The first Deutscher Verein in the United States was organized.

The library was open from two to half-past three Mondays to Fridays, and from half-past nine to twelve on Saturdays.

A storm blew down three Appleton chimneys, two of which went through the roof.

Alumni started a movement to raise the necessary funds to complete Memorial Hall, whose granite walls, temporary roof and shuttered window openings, had marred the campus for a decade.

J. A. Morrill (later to be judge of the Maine S. J. Court) won the '68 prize. His subject: The Origin of American Institutions.

Bowdoin's fourth Ivy Day weekend opened with a boat race between the sophomores and juniors. The sophomores won.

Justice of the United States Supreme Court, President of the Senate, and Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Percival P. Baxter and Thomas L. Marble were respectively first and second in the Sophomore prize speaking.

Webber '95, who had been teaching district school at Jonesport, was characterized by the Bangor Commercial as "a bright, brainy young man, — a grand success."

A series of three German song recitals by Florence Lee Whitman (sister of Professor Lee) called out the entire student body. The Orient editorially expressed the gratitude of the College.

Deficits of the three athletic associations totaling nearly $1000 were disclosed at a mass meeting. Two hundred fifty dollars was raised by subscription among the Faculty, and the balance among the students.

Plans for the Whittier Athletic Field were adopted. Land costing $900 adjoining college property was purchased, and the field was cleared. The naturally level contour and the dry, sandy soil, saved expense in grading and draining. It was estimated that the total expense for putting the field into useable condition would be less than $5000.

X-ray experimentation was being carried on at the Science Building by Professors Hutchins and Robinson. The medics petitioned Prof. Robinson to lecture to them on the prospective possible uses of the X-ray in medicine and surgery.

Lincoln's Birthday was a holiday.

A correction and an apology. The editorial in the February issue contained a careless error. The present Chapel doors were presented to the College (by request) by the Class of 1900 and not by the Class of 1903. Insofar as this notice may accomplish the purpose, the editor ardently desires to restore to 1900 the glory and fame his error so unfortunately tended to take away from that distinguished class.

William Widgery Thomas

As the ALUMNUS goes to press, word is received of the death, on May 23, of William Widgery Thomas A.M. '94. With permission, we are reprinting an article which appeared in the Portland Press Herald on May 24.

William Widgery Thomas, 73, local banker and businessman, died in his home, 120 West Street, Thursday evening. He had been ill several months.

Mr. Thomas had been identified with the development of Maine a half century. He was president of the Canal National Bank and the Maine Savings Bank, both of Portland, and had served as a director and officer of various business firms. He also had served on the board and as head of many educational institutions and charities.

He was born in Portland, April 16, 1873, a 10th generation direct descendent of George Cleves, first settler of Portland. He was the son of Elias and Helen Brown Thomas.

After attending Portland public schools and Portland Military Academy, he was graduated from Bowdoin College in 1894 and studied law at Leland Stanford University. He was admitted to the Maine Bar in 1897 and became associated with the law firm of Bird and Bradley, now Bradley, Linnell, Nulty and Brown. Later he applied himself to the management of real estate, banks, industry and extensive timberlands in Maine and Canada.

Mr. Thomas was elected director in 1906, and, since 1913, has been president of the Canal National Bank of Portland, succeeding his father and grandfather in this position. A member of the family has been a director of this institution since 1836 and has headed the bank since 1849.

He has been president of the Maine Savings Bank since 1935 and a trustee previously during the critical period of the late 1920's and the early 1930's. Both of these banks continued operation after the bank holiday of 1933 without assistance, and have paid dividends without interruption through wars and financial crises since their founding.

Mr. Thomas was the fourth generation of bankers in his family, the first having been his great-grandfather, Elias Thomas, a director of the famous old Cumberland Bank which liquidated after a successful existence when its charter expired in 1931.

In World War I, Mr. Thomas was a member of the Fuel Commission for Maine, as well as chairman for this district for financing the war through short-term certificates. During the financial crisis of the '30's he was chairman of the sub-committee for Maine of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, created to assist banks in difficulties.

Mr. Thomas also was president of the Portland Clearing House Association, director and vice president of the Chapman Electric Neutralizer Co., director of the Portland Company, and succeeded his father and grandfather as director and later president, of the Portland Gas Light Company.

He also succeeded his father and grandfather as director of the Maine General Hospital, the Home for Aged Men and manager of the Portland Benevolent Society. He became president of the latter in 1933.

As director of the Maine General, he was chairman of its Building Committee and took a leading part in the modernization of the hospital, including the financing and building of the new pavilion opened in 1931.

At one time he was overseer of Bowdoin College, later becoming a member of its Board of Trustees and a member of its Finance and Examining Committees. Mr. Thomas received an honorary Master of Arts Degree from Bowdoin at its Sesquicentennial Commencement in 1944. One of his ancestors, William Widgery, was among the original overseers of Bowdoin.

Mr. Thomas was a member of the Bowdoin Chapter, Delta Kappa Epsilon Fraternity, a member of the Cumberland Bar Association, the Cumberland Club, Purpoodock Club, Portland Country Club, Portland Rotary Club, University Club of Boston, Phi Delta Phi Club of Leland Stanford University and the Bowdoin Club of Portland.

In 1900 he married Mary Abbott Cate, daughter of Isaac M. and Charlotte Abbott Cate, and granddaughter of Horace Abbott, builder of the Monitor, famous Civil War ironclad.

Surviving, besides his widow, are two sons, Widgery Thomas, director since 1923 and executive vice president of the Canal National Bank, and Horace Abbott Thomas, recently discharged from the Army after having served as captain with the 143rd Regiment, 36th Division; and five daughters, Mrs. Albert E. Whitehill of White Plains, N. Y., Mrs. Warren Jenney of Bronxville, N. Y., Mrs. G. Rowell Lovett and Mrs. Frank H. Soule of Falmouth, and Miss Cate Thomas of Portland, and 10 grandchildren.

In awarding the honorary degree in 1944, President Sills described Mr. Thomas as an alumnus "bound to Bowdoin by ancestral ties running back well over one hundred years, representing, not only his class on its fiftieth reunion and the important financial interests of his native state, but also Bowdoin fathers with sons absent in their country's service; by inheritance, character and influence" a leading citizen of Portland.

There are now 2676 stars on Bowdoin's service flag. Of these, 90 are gold. According to official records, Paul Monahan '45 remains among those missing in action. There appears little hope that he will be found. The pride we rightly feel for the record of this small college is weighted with sorrow over the loss of so many of her promising sons.

Again the Alumni Office appeals for information concerning service records, such as theaters of operation, rank attained and date of separation from service. We are anxious to know the civilian addresses of hundreds who are, without doubt, long since out of service.

Shortly before he lost his own life in action over Germany, March 2, 1945. Capt. Paul L. Davidson '45 wrote the letter appearing below to his sister, whose husband had been killed in action. The Reader's Digest of January 1945 carried the letter under the title, "Through That Remembrance Gain Strength."

Hello, Ginny:

Sitting on a lone strand of black cloud, a beautiful orange moon shines out over London tonight; beautiful in itself but looking down on the scene of some of war's worst misery. My heart aches, Sister, that this misery has touched you.

Under similar circumstances I have heard people say, "If he were here he would want you to do this" or "He would want you to do that." Who knows just what he would have desired? No one, of course, can be sure, but I feel that Royce would say:

"I cannot ask you not to grieve over our separation, for I fully realize the deep love you have for me and the mutual joy of our comradeship — nor do I ask you to forget me. I want you to remember me always, and through that remembrance gain strength, never allowing it to drag you down. That infinite love which I had for you is not made of stuff that comes and goes with the physical form; it is a spirit that will be with you always. Take strength from it now to meet your hardships and you prove its invincibility. It pleases me greatly to know that our love meant enough and was great enough to overcome any obstacle, to provide an unyielding support with which to meet every challenge of life. Using the remembrance of our relationship to help you lead a happy, useful life will give that relationship meaning until the day you die."

Well, Ginny, I have said it poorly. I knew I would. John Galsworthy once wrote: "It's not life that counts but the fortitude you bring into it." I am proud of the fortitude you have displayed, Ginny; I am proud that you are my sister and I am more than proud to say, "I love you." Good night for now,

Paul

It only looks greener!

As far back as memory goes, the grass over the fence has appeared greener to young people. But sometimes it seems a terrible waste of pleasant pastures when a high percentage of the youth of a given community falls for the delusion and wanders abroad.

So strong is our love of our State, so great our expectations for its future as a place to work and live, that we can't resist exploding the old "green grass over the fence" myth.

Central Maine Power Company has,

for many years, urged graduates of Maine schools and colleges to stay in Maine. Each year we have launched two score or more young men on a career in electricity, and will continue to do so. We know of many State of Maine industries where equal opportunities are regularly made for young men and women who are ready to go into business.

Let it never be said that "the grass over the fence is greener". We of CMP know better. It only looks greener.

Let Us Heed Lincoln

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations."

Lincoln said this in 1865. Had Lincoln lived, reconstruction might have been a blessing, not a scourge.

The world is now facing reconstruction. Lincoln's words are pertinent in today's crisis and should be read and taken to heart at the beginning of every peace conference.

The BOWDOIN ALUMNUS, published November,
February, May and August by Bowdoin College, Brunswick, Maine. Subscription $1.50 year. Single copies 40 cents. Entered as Second Class Matter, November 21, 1927, at the Post Office at Brunswick, Maine, under the Act of March 3, 1879.

COMMENCEMENT brought to a close one of the most effectively active alumni years in Bowdoin's history. Presiding over the largest and most representative Council meeting ever held, retiring President Richard S.
Chapman '28 announced the election to the Board of Overseers of Leon V.
Walker '03, the alumni nominee; welcomed the three new Council members at large, James F. Claverie '10, Ashmead White '12, and Charles T. Ireland, Jr. '42; and handed his blessing along with the gavel to his successor Ezra Pike Rounds '20.

Uppermost in the thoughts and conversations of returning alumni was the Council's recommended program for raising $7,300,000 for Bowdoin.
As the Boards were still in session, President Chapman was unable to report what action would be taken. It may now be stated that the Boards gave thoughtful and sympathetic consideration to the Council proposal, and authorized President Sills to appoint a committee which should have "power to institute, at the earliest practicable moment, a campaign to meet the needs of the College as set forth in the President's Report for 1945-46". Furthermore, the committee is to recommend to the Boards a project or projects for a war memorial.

The President has appointed
From the Trustees: Hoyt A. Moore '95, William W. Lawrence '98, Harold L. Berry '01 and William D. Ireland '16.
From the Overseers: George R. Walker '02, Harry L. Palmer '04, Chester
G. Abbott '13 and Adriel U. Bird '16.
From the Alumni Council: Ezra P. Rounds '20, Richard S. Chapman '28, Stephen D. Trafton '28 and Charles T. Ireland, Jr. '42.
From the Alumni: John H. Halford '07, Edward P. Garland '16, Roliston
G. Woodbury '22 and Alden H. Sawyer '27.
From the Faculty: Herbert R. Brown, Morgan B. Cushing, Seward J.
Marsh '12 and Philip S. Wilder '23.
From the Undergraduates: the President of the Student Council and the Editor-in-Chief of the Orient.

The committee is to meet this summer to organize and perhaps to increase its membership.
To the Alumni Council and to all alumni this is cheering news. The fact that the committee is bidden to be guided by the college needs as stated in the President's Report rather than by the objectives outlined in the Council's program is not important. Through their Council the alumni of Bowdoin have stated that their college has pressing needs and have urged immediate, aggressive action to raise the funds which alone can meet those needs. The Governing Boards have responded promptly and have authorized a working committee with power to act. That is important.
The decision and plans of the committee will be eagerly awaited. As always, Bowdoin men ask only to be told how they may join their efforts to complete the undertaking to give to Bowdoin what Bowdoin needs.

ONCE again alumni responses have set new highs for the Alumni Fund.
Chairman Freeman reports $63,280.92 from 3353 contributors. The annual habit giving of Bowdoin sons now amounts to a sum which is equivalent of the income on about $1,750,000 endowment which the College does not have. When stated in those terms, the value of each giver's mite must be apparent to all. In steadily increasing numbers, Bowdoin men are voluntarily contributing regularly through the Alumni Fund what their hearts and their means permit. The perennial needs of their College are being given a place in over 3,000 personal budgets along with the needs of church and local social agencies. More and more Bowdoin men are recognizing the undisputed necessity for education and training of youth, such as Bowdoin gives, and are joining their several giving abilities in an impressive and increasingly important Alumni gift to keep Bowdoin strong. The College appreciates deeply this mass demonstration of loyalty and affection and tenders sincere thanks to the givers and to the Fund Directors and Agents whose labors make the gift possible. One cannot envy the future of a college which has no such heartening alumni support.

WHEN Don MacMillan and his crew set forth from Boothbay Harbor in the newly refitted Bowdoin, Harry Shulman, indefatigable camera recorder of Bowdoin history, was busy shooting all and sundry scenes. Our cover picture is one of Harry's happy shots—the Bowdoin under way to the nor-

Bowdoin's One Hundred Forty-First

Robert L. Edwards '43 Reports on the First Commencement He Has Been Privileged to Attend

TROUBLOUS times, transportation difficulties, housing problems and food shortages notwithstanding, and in spite of threatening weather, one of the largest assemblies of alumni on record gathered on the old campus to celebrate the first peacetime Commencement — Bowdoin's 141st. Old grads with record of many a June return, young alumni many of whom had been prevented by war from attending before, wives and children, the Society of Bowdoin Women and that newcomer to the ranks, the Bowdoin Fathers Association — more than a thousand of them were here to renew friendships and pledge again loyalty to Alma Mater. And spirit there was aplenty.

Fewer uniforms were visible but discharge buttons were everywhere, and returning veterans, weary of a callous public's readiness to forget the war, were agreeably surprised to discover that Bowdoin had not forgotten either the war or the part Bowdoin sons had played in it. The College, whose students are and will long be largely service men, eagerly welcomed her service alumni. It was a Victory Commencement with a joyful greeting for those who came back and sorrowful pride for the gallant unreturning. That spirit was evident in the exercises which began with a Chapel memorial service to the war dead and ended with a tumultuous acclaim to Congressional Medal of Honor man, Maj. Everett Pope '41. Furthermore, Bowdoin men of all ages were unquestionably agreed that their college was one of the valued parts of the civilization for which the war was fought. They knew and said that Bowdoin was of the best but, facing conditions realistically, were determined that Bowdoin should be strengthened, that Bowdoin's time-honored liberal art training must endure. The topic of every group was the Alumni Council's recommended program to raise seven million dollars for needed buildings and for added endowment.

Traditional Program Underway

The commencement week activity—abnormal and traditional at the same time—began on Sunday when President Sills delivered his Baccalaureate Address in the Chapel. Asking the graduating class to have faith in the future, he urged them to grapple with the intricate problems of a very complex society and to be prepared to cope with the problems of domestic and industrial strife and the danger of future international misunderstanding.

Underclassmen hurried through the last of their finals early in the week. It seemed as if they had been continually hurrying for the past five years, but retention of the accelerated program was by their own choice so that schooling could be finished and jobs started.

By Thursday afternoon, alumni began pouring into town, and reunion advance guards set up headquarters. Bowdoin looked just the same, or if anything, more beautiful than we had remembered it. The grounds were in immaculate order after weeks of rain and of faithful nursing by Don Potter and crew. The new walks laid during the war were favorably noted. The buildings looked as if they had survived the war years well with the most noticeable addition the Rare Book Room in Hubbard Hall. Familiar faculty faces completed the picture, although Dean Nixon was noticeably absent.

Wanted, Seven Million

First official events of the commencement program were the meetings of the Trustees and Overseers. Faced with countless new problems arising since the end of the war, one of the most ambitious projects discussed was the recommendation of the Alumni Council that a drive be undertaken immediately to raise $7,300,000. Over half of this amount would be added to the capital funds of the College, $2,800,000 for buildings and the remainder for new and larger pre-matriculation scholarships. President Sills was authorized to appoint a committee to be chosen from the Governing Boards, Alumni Council, undergraduates and Faculty. This committee is to examine the proposal and to institute whatever portion of it appears to be feasible.

Faced with a probable enrollment of 900 or more in the fall, the Governing Boards were unable to reach an immediate decision as to where the overflow might be housed, and it was decided to take up the problem in two weeks' time. It was voted to increase faculty salaries 10 per cent in keeping with the rising cost of living, and 18 faculty members were advanced in rank following a wartime period of status quo. It was also decided to raise tuition from $150 a semester to $200.

1916 Does It Again

But Thursday's events were not entirely confined to discussions and deliberations. Returning to their 30th reunion, inspired by the success of the 1941 gathering and with Paul Niven and Dwight Sayward again co-chairmen, the class of 1916 started the list of social events with a tea at their Pickard Field House headquarters on Thursday afternoon to which the Governing Boards, Alumni Officers and the Faculty were invited.

The '16 pace did not let up following the afternoon tea, for no sooner had the honored guests departed when members of the class and their wives and families gathered for a buffet supper at the Field House. Professor and Mrs. Herbie Brown were invited to attend, and after the class was marshaled to order by the stern whistle of master-of-ceremonies Sayward, Professor Brown talked informally on the popular literature of the 1912-16 era, pointing out that The Youth's Companion and Happy Hooligan have never been heard of by the undergraduates of today. Adjourning to Memorial Hall, the class was entertained with reels of Charlie Chaplin masterpieces. Professor Brown's long list of distinguished honors was further supplemented when he was unanimously voted an honorary member of 1916.

Alumni Meetings

As more alumni arrived on campus Friday morning, more annual meetings took place. The Alumni Fund Directors assembled in Hubbard Hall at 9 a.m. and Secretary Marsh reported that, after canvassing the alumni ballots, President Sills had appointed as new Directors for three years Kendrick Burns '14, Edward Humphrey '17 and Alexander Standish '21. Following a discussion of the progress of the current Alumni Fund, the Directors elected as officers for the ensuing year Widgery Thomas '22 Chairman, Dana M. Swan '29 Vice-chairman and Seward J. Marsh '12 Secretary.

The next group to convene was the Alumni Council and it proved to be the largest and most representative Council ever assembled. It was announced that Leon V. Walker '03 was the Alumni nominee for the Board of Overseers and that he had been elected. Newly elected members-at-large of the Council were James F. Claverie '10, Ashmead White '12 and Charles T. Ireland, Jr., '42. Reports of the standing committees were followed by President Chapman's report of progress made on the Council's proposal to raise $7,300,000. Officers elected for 1946-47 were Ezra Pike Rounds '20 President, Sanford B. Cousins '20 Vice-president, Seward J. Marsh '12 Secretary and Glenn R. McIntire '25 Treasurer.

The Alumni Association luncheon at the Moulton Union was well attended and at the general meeting following, announcement was made of the decisions reached at the morning sessions. President Rounds officially relieved the retiring president, Richard S. Chapman '28. Phi Beta Kappa, Alpha of Maine, held its annual meeting in Hubbard Hall in the afternoon and eight new members were initiated.

Reunions, Official and Impromptu

Class reunions were in full swing by that time and large groups were assembled at the several headquarters around the campus. Among the well-known members of the Old Guard returning were Dr. George W. Bourne and Professor Henry A. Huston of the class of 1879, Professor Emeritus William A. Moody '82, Walter V. Wentworth '86 and Professor Emeritus Wilmot B. Moody '90.

The fifty-year class made its headquarters in the Moulton Union with Henry W. Owen, Jr., reunion chairman. Among those who registered were Small, Frost, Dana, Bass, Merrill, Robinson, Dane, Kyes, Knight, Lyford, Thompson, Owen and Willard. In observance of the occasion, chairman Owen had prepared a very attractive booklet giving history of

The class of 1901, celebrating its 45th, set up headquarters in the newly opened Harriet Beecher Stowe House with Walter L. Sanborn and Harold L. Berry in charge. The class was entertained for luncheon at the Sills' house Friday noon, and the group held its class dinner at the home of the late Herbert L. Swett at Lakewood following the commencement exercises. Members of 1903 enjoyed a deferred 40th with a clam bake at the Auburn Colony, Harpswell, and 1906 made its 40th reunion headquarters in North Hyde. Forty members of 1911 returned for their 35th. Chairman William H. Clifford set up headquarters at Jack Magee's house, and arranged the class dinner at the Square Deal Inn, Bailey's Island.

The '16 group continued in full stride, taking a Casco Bay excursion Friday morning. A class banquet followed at Poland Spring in the evening attended by 130 class members and families. Class president Herbert H. Foster and wife set some sort of commencement record by motoring to Brunswick from Palm Springs, California, to attend the reunion.

gathered in the Hyde Athletic building for the annual Commencement Dinner, while wives and daughters met for luncheon in the Gymnasium under the auspices of the Society of Bowdoin Women. Tradition once again came to the fore as the menu was headed with lobster and chicken salad and potato chips. Precentor John W. Thomas '18 optimistically attempted to unify the efforts of Chandler's Band and the voices of the 1,000 guests to the strains of the College Hymn.

State of the College

When the roar of alumni greeting had subsided, President Sills started the after-dinner speaking with his customary account of the State of the College. He summarized the discussions of the Governing Boards in their several Commencement meetings and welcomed the large group of alumni back after three lean commencement years. Faculty promotions, retirements and appointments were named and he outlined the problems to be faced at the summer and fall sessions.

The singing of Phi Chi brought back memories to all of the classes. Unknown to the assembled alumni, during the singing of the ancient battle song, at the point where each class shouts its own class numerals, the radio audience was greeted with a lusty "Nineteen Sixteen" as announcer Herbie Brown supported his patron class.

Dr. Hildreth Diagnoses

Speaking for the State of Maine, Governor Horace A. Hildreth expressed the hope that many of the graduates would find their life's work in Maine, declaring that the same opportunities exist here as elsewhere. He urged his listeners to remember the greatness of their country and to display, in time of peace, a little more of the patriotism which had carried us to such heights of co-operative endeavor during the war. He suggested that we should be seeking opportunities to give to our state instead of seeking ways to take something from it.

Alumni Council President Richard S. Chapman spoke for the Alumni. He told of the active work being done by the newly enlarged Council and urged serious and careful consideration of the Council's major fund raising proposal. He stressed the importance of immediate action. "We are proud of Bowdoin's past," he said, "but on us, the Alumni, rests the responsibility of much of Bowdoin's future." The cherished Alumni Achievement Award was made in absentia to James F. Claverie '10, former president of the Bowdoin Club of Boston and manager of the highly successful Bowdoin Night at the Boston Symphony Pops.

Finished by 3 P. M.!

Speaking for Bowdoin at Washington, the Honorable Robert Hale '10 praised the work of Supreme Court Justice Harold H. Burton '09 and Senators Wallace H. White '99 and Owen Brewster '09. Commenting on the Bowdoin delegation in the House (himself), Mr. Hale testified, "It is united, harmonious and determined. What more can you ask?" Among others he gave praise to Albert Abrahamson '26 and Sumner T. Pike '13 for their valued services in the nation's capital.

Concluding the commencement program, Major Everett Pope '41 spoke for the Bowdoin men of the services, declaring that the real heroes of the war are the men who are not returning. With modest reference to military decorations, Major Pope said, "Courage is immeasurable." Fittingly, Major Pope was given the greatest ovation of all of the commencement speakers.

Closing a very successful Bowdoin Commencement, President Sills announced that a life-time ambition had been realized—the Commencement Dinner was over by 3 p.m.!

Mac and the Bowdoin Head North Once More

Albert T. Gould '08 Reports the Resumption of Arctic Exploration by Veteran Ship and Veteran Skipper

IT was a happy day for Donald MacMillan and every Bowdoin man when the good ship Bowdoin, veteran of World War II, was released by the Navy after four years of service to the country in Greenland waters, and once more became the property of MacMillan. She was the only ship in our navy that bore the name of a college. The college may well be proud of the Bowdoin's war record.

On June 29, her topsides shining white and her masts glistening with many coats of varnish, the Bowdoin set sail from Boothbay Harbor on her twenty-fourth voyage to the North under MacMillan's command. The nearby wharves and shores were packed with friends who gathered to wish her and her captain God-speed and a safe return from Labrador and Baffin Land. Those who went as far as Monhegan waved her a fond good-bye as she swayed up her sails and swung off for Cape Sable in the late afternoon sunshine.

As on former peace-time voyages, scientific research is the principal object of the present voyage. Under the auspices of the Colorado Museum of Natural History, MacMillan and a group of scientists will seek the elusive haunts of the Kumlein gull in its reputed nesting place in Baffin Land. Among the crew is John Matthews, son of E. Curtis Matthews '10. Kenneth Schubert '47 deserves commendation for his generous service to MacMillan. When blankets ordered for the Bowdoin failed to arrive, Schubert drove all night from Boothbay Harbor to Springfield, had the warehouse there opened in the early morning, secured the blankets and rushed them back to Boothbay.

When MacMillan reaches the Arctic waters where he and Captain Bob Bartlett were shipmates with Admiral Peary in the years now long past, he will especially miss Captain Bob. They were devoted friends during all the years since they shared common adventures on Peary's ship Roosevelt and out on the Polar Sea in 1908-9. MacMillan's splendid tribute to Bob Bartlett shows the admiration and affection he felt for him. President Sills also paid a fine tribute to Captain Bob when he conferred on him an honorary degree of Master of Arts in 1920, and referred to him as the "loyal and brave companion of Peary on the trip to the Pole, reaching the farthest North of any man of the white race except the great explorer himself; courageous seafarer and explorer."

May the Bowdoin, guided by the skilled hand of Donald MacMillan, successfully explore the high latitudes of Baffin's Bay and other Arctic waters for many years to come.

As the ALUMNUS goes to press, the schooner Bowdoin has returned to Boothbay Harbor ending Commander MacMillan's shortest trip to northern waters. The veteran explorer said that he had encountered more ice off the Labrador coast than he had previously seen in 38 years of sailing in these areas. Several small islands were explored and more than sixty specimens of Arctic bird-life were obtained, but the ornithologists failed to find any trace of the Kumlein Gull, whose existence is a matter of scientific dispute.

To Captain Robert A. Bartlett H'20

Written by Donald B. MacMillan On Board the Ship Bowdoin at Sea Off the Nova Scotia Coast

CAPTAIN BOB has left port on his final voyage. We shall never again hear of his departure and arrival as we have so many times in the past.

The estimate of the real value of a man should be based upon his contribution to his fellowmen. It may be a smile, a bit of cheer, or a deed heard throughout the world.

What did Bob give to us? The S.S. Roosevelt was building at Bucksport, Maine. Her strength was plainly evident in every particular. Her masts were of Oregon pine, her keel, keelson, frame, planking, of native white oak, her sheathing of Australian ironwood. Such a ship, especially constructed to contend against storms and heavy ice, deserved a strong man as her master, one born of the sea, one of determination, of undoubted courage, of love of battle.

Peary knew where to find him — Brigus, Newfoundland. This young man of thirty-one was of the famous line of Bartletts. His father, Captain William, and his uncles Captain John, Captain Harry, Mose and Sam, had made their mark. They were all known as successful men in their line of work.

Peary wanted a man who would take a chance, one willing to sacrifice his life for a worthy cause. He found him in Bob.

In August, 1905, Torngak, the Great Spirit of the North, and his associate spirits, those of winds, snows, sleet, cold, thin ice, thick ice, peered from the white spotted hills of Smith Sound at a stub-nosed black hull, deep with coal, winding through the leads, ever gaining headway on her way northward. They were not alarmed over the defense of their kingdom. Others had besieged their ramparts, from the days of the Northmen, a thousand years ago, and had been repulsed; ships, the best ever devised, had been crushed flat, one literally turned inside out. The best men that nations could send had entered, many of them had remained. In the words of an old Eskimo woman, "They fell forward on their faces and died as they walked."

These same guardians of the North were a bit concerned when the Roosevelt had entered the portals of Smith Sound and were alarmed when she was skillfully guided by a master hand, through the icefields of Kane Basin, Kennedy and Robeson Channels, to the edge of the Polar Sea. On she went, farther north than any ship had ever sailed; and there, her work done, that for which she was built, she rested, snuggling close to the ice-foot at 82° 30' on the northern shores of Grant Land. Captain Bob, Peary's selection, had not failed.

Battered and bruised and leaking, with rudder post torn away, the Roosevelt reeled unsteadily south in the summer of 1906. Only a master hand could have brought her in her crippled and unseaworthy condition along the Atlantic Coast, through Vineyard Haven Sound, Long Island Sound, Hell Gate, and crowded New York harbor.

Success is often a matter of chance. Conditions were favorable. But in 1908 Bob again guides the Roosevelt through the ice-congested waters of Melville Bay. Again he weaves in and out between the ice-floes of Kane Basin, Kennedy and Robeson Channels, and places his commander within reach of the Pole.

Not only of great value on the bridge of his ship, but as commander of the last supporting party, he proved his worth. Tough, strong, reliable, and above all loyal, he plodded on out over the Polar Sea, with frost-bitten wrists and face, to nearly 88 North latitude, ever willing to go on out into the unknown. He was helping his commander to do what that great man had been trying to do for eighteen years.

And when it was over and the work done and ship tied up, he could not forget. Back he went into the North to contend against the elements, to test his strength, his skill, his knowledge, to subdue every hostile spirit of land, sea and air.

Yes, he loved the North, with its blue sea dotted with dazzling white bergs, its valleys white with glaciers, its high hills crowned with the eternal ice-cap, its walrus, seals, polar bears, and laughing Eskimos. If ever a man was a part of the Arctic, Bob was.

All through the long dark night we looked forward to the dash to the Pole. We enjoyed our long trips by moonlight, we welcomed the bitter twilight days of February. And there in a snowhouse at the base of Cape Columbia we gathered for a final get-together. We talked of the dangers of the trip out over the shifting pack, of the possibility of a non-return. We wondered if we should ever be together again — Marvin, Bartlett, Borup, and myself. We never were. Marvin was drowned far from land.

Laughingly we dismissed the thought and sang our college songs, and then one that Bob liked, "Amici usque ad aras, deep graven on each heart shall be found unwavering true, when we from life shall part."

We shall miss you, Bob, for what you gave us, courage, faith, strength, loyalty, love of your father and mother, to the very last, good fellowship toward all.

In Westminster Chapel in London I found these lines written in memory of Sir John Franklin, one of England's great explorers. With but one change I apply them to Bob:

*Not here, the Great White North hast thy spirit
And thou heroic sailor soul
Art journeying on toward no earthly goal.*

Bowdoin In The News

Local newspapers have featured the Devine family of South Portland for having set a Bowdoin record. The four sons of John J. Devine '11 are now out of service and there is one enrolled in each of Bowdoin's four classes. It is not unlikely that this is an intercollegiate record as well. In the accompanying picture are, from left to right, Edward (a junior), John, Jr. (a senior), Mrs.

Devine, John, Sr., Wilfrid (a sophomore), and Bernard (a freshman). The extra-curricula activities of the boys are varied; as yet, however, none of the sons has indicated that he will eclipse the undergraduate fame of his dad, whom many will remember as a varsity football end of stellar rating. Father and four sons are members of Delta Kappa Epsilon.

Each year the Kiwanis Club of Portland awards the Kiwanis Plaque for Distinguished Service to the City of Portland. This distinction is given for outstanding civic service and is highly prized by its recipients. The 1946 award was made on June 25 to Chester G. Abbott '13 at a ceremony graced by officials and dignitaries of the city. As president of the Kiwanis Club, George C. Kern '12 made the presentation.

Athletics

DURING the first term of the present summer trimester, a real attempt has been made to have intercollegiate competition in baseball, tennis and golf. In addition, there has been interfraternity competition in softball and touch football and individual play in tournaments in golf and tennis. It has been almost impossible to find competition with other colleges in any sport.

As the second summer term opens, preparation and practice will begin for the first official football season since 1942. It is too early to know much about the prospects for the football team for this fall, except that we know that Bowdoin will be represented by a good team. It is when we begin to think about the teams that Amherst, Williams, Bates, Colby and Maine will have that we become worried. We know from the make-up of their spring teams and from their press releases, listing the names of athletes who have returned, that they are going to have far more football players available than Bowdoin. Apparently, more Bowdoin men got degrees for work done in such service units as the V-12.

Furthermore, Bowdoin does not plan to allow civilian freshmen to play on the varsity this fall. It simply is not the best thing for the freshmen, to compete in active sports when they have to adjust themselves to college work, and it may not be a good thing for the future football teams. Freshmen will be eligible for the junior varsity teams.

Class of 1950

OF the 650 students who registered for the summer trimester there were six transfers, 42 special students and 41 freshmen in the vanguard of the class of 1950.

Maine leads with 15 freshmen, followed by Massachusetts with 10, Connecticut sends 5 and Ohio 3. Two freshmen each come from Indiana, New Hampshire, New York and Pennsylvania.

The Bowdoin sons are Charles W. Carruthers (Charles T. Carruthers '88), Wallace S. Houston, Jr. (Wallace S. Houston '22), Charles R. LaCasce (Elroy O. LaCasce '14), Robert B. Mason (B. Henry Mason M'07), Hiram H. Nickerson (Norman H. Nickerson '16), and Frederick W. Powers, Jr. (Frederick W. Powers '16).

J. Brooke Aker of North Wales, Pa., and J. Russell Washburne, Jr., of Bloomfield, Conn., are entering on Bowdoin Scholarships. Recipients of Alumni Fund Scholarships are Howard Reiche of Portland and Robert J. Waldron of Brunswick.

WORK has started on a new hard surface walk from Massachusetts Hall to the Packard Gateway on College Street. The walk, a gift to the College from a donor who chooses to remain anonymous, is a welcome addition to similar gifts from Mr. Walter V. Wentworth and the classes of 1886, 1895, 1910, and 1919.

Music

ACTIVITIES are suspended during the first term of the summer session but will be resumed with vigor during the second term. A full strength Glee Club is to be organized, the first since the war, and rehearsals begun for a heavily booked fall and winter season. Three performances of the Messiah at Christmas, joint concerts with the clubs of several women's colleges, a spring concert tour will precede the club's appearance at the Bowdoin Night at Boston Symphony Pops. Musical chapels are to be resumed and an organ recital on the Curtis organ is planned. The Polar Bears orchestra is already forming and the Meddiebempsters, double quartet, will soon start rehearsals. Professor Tillotson expects the most active musical year of his Bowdoin experience.

Dramatics

FOR the first time since 1943, when The Winter's Tale was played in a heavy mist, the Commencement Play was favored with fair and balmy weather; and an appreciative audience witnessed the antics of the Dromio twins around the pillars and up and down the steps of the Art Museum. Despite the objections of a leg-conscious cast, The Comedy of Errors was costumed in classical mantles and so was highly decorative.

The Masque and Gown presented the popular and moving war play, The Hasty Heart, in Memorial Hall on August 1 to a large and enthusiastic audience. One of the visiting students from Swarthmore, Walter Carel, who had played the part there during the spring, played the leading role with understanding and assurance; and George Fogg, son of the late General Fogg '02, ably supported him, as did the other members of the cast, most of whom are new to Bowdoin audiences. Fogg's previous appearance had been in Henry IV, Part 1 in 1940.

Most of the veterans, around whom the extra-curricular activities of the College must be built for the next few years, have been hesitant to spare the time from their studies to support the dramatic program. The success of the performance of The Hasty Heart may be the needed impetus to enlist their support; otherwise the few faithful production workers, who have alone kept the Masque and Gown alive through the war years will be worked to death.

Plans are now under consideration for a presentation at Christmas of Euripides' Cyclops, the production to be a joint effort of the Classical Club and the Masque and Gown; and a similar conjunction of stars may take place at Commencement in 1947 for Aeschylus' Seven Against Thebes.

DAVE PORTER '06 does much of his educational work for POW in the Library of Congress. That the Library is air cooled is one satisfactory by-product of his labors; another is that he occasionally runs across some interesting bits of information. All Bowdoin men will share his interest in the appended extract from a current Bulletin of the Library.

That people generally have forgotten the distinguished record of George Evans (1797-1867) may possibly be forgiven. And yet, the venerable John Quincy Adams considered him "one of the ablest men and most eloquent orators in Congress". James G. Blaine described him as "a man of commanding power" and "entitled to rank next to Mr. Webster". Webster himself held him in high regard. A recent biographer notes that "his career . . . shows how readily, under such conditions as prevailed in the fifties, a leader of first-rate ability may be sidetracked, and fail to attain the enduring fame which apparently he merited". Born in Hallowell, Maine, graduated from Bowdoin College in 1815, a member, ten years later, of the State Legislature, he came to the national House of Representatives in 1829, and promptly won recognition as an authority in the field of public finance. In 1841 he entered the Senate and served until 1847. What gives to the life of Senator Evans a special interest for Federal employees is the fact that he was the father of the Act of August 26, 1842, which provided "That on and after the first day of July in the year of our Lord eighteen hundred and forty-three, the fiscal year of the Treasury of the United States, in all matters of accounts, receipts, expenditures, estimates, and appropriations shall commence on the first day of July". Thanks to that legislation it becomes my privilege to wish every member of the staff a happy and prosperous new Year, and, while I'm about it, to express the hope that each will have a glorious Fourth and a grand vacation.

Phi Beta Kappa

IN the past year the same number of men have been elected to Phi Beta Kappa as in 1944-45 — eight, as against a normal pre-war twelve to fifteen. Dr. Ivan M. Spear '44 of Portland was received into the Society upon the award of his Bowdoin bachelor's degree concurrently with his medical degree from McGill. R. M. Cross and Norman Waks, both returned veterans, were added to the 1945 delegation. Shepard Lifshitz, previously the only representative from 1947, was joined by C. H. Lebovitz, R. C. Miller, and N. T. Whitman; and Simon Dorfman and M. E. Robinson were chosen as the first members from 1948. There are now six Phi Betes in the student body: Carmichael '44; Cross and Waks '45; Gordon '46; and Dorfman and Robinson '48.

Initiations were held in October and February as well as at the annual meeting in June. There was no formal address at the October meeting, but in February the Chapter had a dinner at the Union (the first in three years) in honor of all members of the Faculty returned from military or governmental service. That evening in Memorial Hall, under the auspices of the Chapter, Colonel Boyd W. Bartlett '17, head of the Department of Chemistry and Electricity in the United States Military Academy, lectured on "The Physical Sciences and National Security."

America's oldest boarding school, Governor Dummer Academy, was founded in 1763 in South Byfield, Massachusetts. The photograph shows the head of the English department teaching a class of seniors around a table in the school library.

Governor Dummer is a school of 175 boys and 20 masters. Its students come from all parts of the United States. The size of the school and the number of masters make possible small classes, individual attention, and a friendly, homelike atmosphere.

During the twelve-year period preceding the war (September, 1931, to September, 1942, inclusive), Governor Dummer sent 46 boys to Bowdoin and 46 boys to Harvard, a slightly larger number than was sent during that period to any other single college.

Last year's officers were re-elected. Wilbert Snow heads the Literary Committee, of which the other members are R. H. Hupper '07, C. H. Crosby '17, D. E. Christie '37, and Professor Stallknecht. Delegates to the Council, meeting at Williamsburg, Virginia, September 9-11, were appointed as follows: Hon. Harold H. Burton '09, Bela W. Norton '18, and the Secretary, Professor Stanley P. Chase '05. Alternates are: Captain Myron H. Avery '20, USNR, Ellsworth E. Clark '27, and Professor Herbert R. Brown.

THE American Rhodes Scholarships is the title of a recent "review of the first forty years" by Frank Aydelotte, American Secretary to Rhodes Trustees. Between 1904 and 1939, when elections were interrupted by the war, 1,126 American Rhodes Scholars were elected. Twelve of these were Bowdoin men:

David R. Porter '06, Robert Hale '10, Edward E. Kern '11, Laurence A. Crosby '13, Neal Tuttle '14, Robert P. T. Coffin '15, Philip D. Crockett '20, Alexander Thomson '21, Edward B. Ham '22, Lawrence B. Leighton '25, Dana M. Swan '29 and J. P. Pettegrove '30.

IN his letter to all alumni when the Association ballot was mailed, President Chapman suggested that perhaps some would be willing to send in the one dollar life dues, if they were, like him, satisfied that they had never made that payment. He and Treasurer McIntire proffer herewith their thanks and appreciation to the more than 600 who responded with legal tender. The Association has been able to meet all its bills and to carry a small balance to next year's needs. How the expenses of the future, very largely the cost of printing and mailing the annual ballot, are to be met, is a topic which the Alumni Council has under consideration.

Fall Trimester

FROM all present indications Bowdoin is likely to be a college of nearly 1000 students when the fall trimester opens. Endeavoring to meet the national need and admit as many qualified veterans as possible, the College has arranged to occupy the officers quarters at the Brunswick Naval Air Station which is going on a caretaker basis in September. Furniture and necessary equipment are now being sought for some 200 students who will be housed there. Transportation must also be arranged to carry students the three miles to meals and classes on the campus. It is reported that the University of Maine will establish an extension unit of 800 or more G.I. freshmen in the enlisted men's barracks, with dining halls, classrooms and faculty residences in other Air Station buildings.

All Bowdoin dormitories and fraternity houses will be full to overflowing. The expected 125 married students and the single undergraduates for whom there are no college quarters will occupy every known available apartment and room in Brunswick. The substantially amplified teaching staff has as one of its immediate problems the scheduling of classes and class room use. Some evening meetings may be necessary.

Bowdoin Fathers

HAVING organized at Commencement, adopted a set of by-laws and with officers elected, the Bowdoin Fathers Association is now planning its first big gathering, Fathers Day, on Saturday, October 19. Members have been notified and urged to attend the luncheon and the Bowdoin-Williams game on that day. The meeting is planned as a welcome to the fathers of new students. All fathers of present or former Bowdoin undergraduates are asked to notify the Secretary, Carleton C. Young, 24 College Street, Brunswick, of their intention to be present and to assist further by sending to the Secretary names of Bowdoin fathers who may not have been contacted.

Books

NORMAN L. MUNN, Psychology: The Fundamentals of Human Adjustment, Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston. Pp., 497.

Dr. Munn's new textbook in general psychology, just off the press, has already been adopted in a hundred and fifty colleges in the United States and Canada. This is sufficient testimony of its excellence, and this review will concern itself principally in noting several directions in which this excellence lies.

A glance at the Table of Contents suggests the adequacy of the coverage of the required topics in the field, and this impression is confirmed by a reading of the book. That so much material can be contained in but 497 pages is made possible both by the printing format and the economy of the book's organization. There comes to mind no fuller textbook of its kind.

As one concrete evidence of this richness it might be noted that few elementary textbooks, like this one, have room for a chapter on the important subject of statistics in psychology. In addition to textual fullness, visual exposition is likewise notable, for the book is rich in diagrams, charts, and illustrative pictures.

The fundamental requirement of a good textbook has been met in that style is clear, direct, and hence interesting. There are frequent references to the student's everyday experience; while Dr. Munn has drawn on his own thorough knowledge of animal psychology to illustrate and clarify comparatively principles of human behavior. While the text has been well documented, minor names and titles have been wisely relegated to the reference pages at the end of the chapters. Only a few of the more important psychologists and their works have been explicitly noted in the main body of the exposition, which device saves the student from being overburdened with a puzzling confusion of titles and names. Naturally this has involved selection, and not every teacher would agree with the emphasis. For instance, the writer would like to have seen the historical contribution of Freud and Watson made a little more explicit. But this is the sort of thing that each instructor may manipulate for himself. The fundamental pedagogical principle is an excellent one, and the reader will find that no important psychological school has been left out of account.

Finally, the material is not only up-to-date, but the handling is fresh and not merely a pale reflection of the scores of other textbooks of the same type. For instance, there is a most adequate account of the recent researches of Sheldon and Stevens, which suggests that physique and personality may be much more closely related than has been believed. Many textbooks of recent copyright still cite the refutation of Kretschmer's hypotheses as the last word on the subject.

Dr. Munn's Psychology is destined for wide circulation. It gives ample evidence of the ability of the new Head of Bowdoin's Department of Psychology.

Walter H. Clark

ROY A. FOULKE, Practical Financial Statement Analysis, McGraw-Hill Book Co., Inc., N. Y., 1945. Pp. xx, 681. $6.50.

According to the editor's foreword, this book was written "in response to an insistent demand from businessmen and instructors alike for a practical sound text on the analysis of financial statements of industrial and commercial business enterprises, large and small." Unquestionably, with this volume, Mr. Foulke makes another valuable contribution to the literature in the field of his special interest.

The book is divided into seven parts, the first of which deals with the historical background of analysis and includes a comprehensive discussion of the classification of balance sheet items. Then follows, in part II, a chapter on the sales analysis of small business enterprises, a technique which the author recommends for the 83 per cent of all active business concerns which have a tangible net worth of $10,000 or less.

In parts III and IV Mr. Foulke discusses the internal and comparative analyses of balance sheets, based upon ten important financial ratios. Following the presentation of the theory underlying each ratio, there are three sets of illustrative figures, fully analyzed. This wealth of case material is one of the most valuable features of the book. Schedules giving typical ratios for various lines of business activity make it possible to compare those for a given enterprise with the average for its industry.

Parts V and VI explain and analyze the profit and loss statement and the surplus accounts. Here certain additional ratios are introduced and there is an interesting chapter on the determination of the break-even point. The final chapter (part VII) deals with the evolution of accounting principles and standards. Questions and problems at the close of each chapter increase the value of the book for students.

Throughout the book Mr. Foulke quite properly points out the limitations, as well as the advantages, of ratio analysis and indicates the danger of reaching conclusions on the basis of insufficient evidence. He recognizes that financial statements often reflect opinions and "accounting conventions" as well as facts and he emphasizes that frequently it is necessary to secure supplementary information in order to make a proper analysis.

At one point the author states that while an ability to interpret the financial statements is essential, an executive need not know how to prepare them, since accountants are available for that purpose. This reviewer would question this, for in his opinion only those persons who understand the basic principles of accounting can be expected to analyze statements intelligently and accurately. However, anyone who possesses this basic knowledge, whether student or businessman, will be better able to appraise and interpret financial statements after a careful study of this book.

PHILIP M. BROWN

JOHN L. PEPPER, M.D., The Fall of Troy; The Wanderings; The Great Italian War; metrical translations of the first two books; the third, fifth, and sixth books; and the seventh, eighth, and twelfth books, respectively, of Virgil's Aeneid. And by the same author, A Metrical Translation of the First Book of the Metamorphoses of Ovid. Privately printed. Pp., 30, 46, 47, and 23, respectively.

At a time when the highly specialized demands on man's efforts too often confine his interests to the narrow limits of a single field, it is reassuring and refreshing to find men of one profession participating in and contributing to the endeavors of another. Dr. Pepper's translations should be welcomed by classicists as an added proof of the timelessness and universal appeal of Virgil and Ovid.

Dr. Pepper combines a remarkable accuracy as a translator with a commendable poetical gift. In this connection it is notable that the author modestly refrains from referring to his translations as "poetical" and scrupulously characterizes them as "metrical." His choice of meter may possibly occasion some criticism from those who feel that rhyming iambic pentameter couplets detract from the epic quality of the original hexameters. One has the feeling, however, that Dr. Pepper himself not only sensed no such restriction, but actually believed that the rhymes added a sweep to his lines. At all events, the accuracy of his translation is not noticeably impaired by the requirements of rhyme.

It is to be regretted that Dr. Pepper elected to omit Book Four of the Aeneid for the reason which he gives in the Foreword to The Wanderings. True, "the sordid matter of the love affair," as he calls the Dido episode, does not pertain to the narrative of the wanderings of the hero, with which the translator is primarily concerned. But that Virgil invented the story "only to match the Homeric tale of Ulysses and Calypso" is to shut one's eyes to the allegorical significance of Aeneas' final triumph over temptation (i.e. the triumph of Roman civilization over Carthaginian barbarism).

A separate word should be added concerning the translation of the First Book of Ovid's Metamorphoses. In this work Dr. Pepper has not translated the whole first book, but instead has selected only lines 89 through 415, the passage devoted to the creation of man, commencing with the description of the Golden Age. This passage he carries through the Silver, Brass, and Iron Ages, the story of Lycaon, the Flood, and the survival of Deucalion and Pyrrha. The rendering of this selection is highly successful throughout and closes with twenty magnificent lines which attest the translator's thorough feeling for the subject of his original.

NATHAN DANE, II

LLEWELLYN WHITE AND ROBERT D. LEIGH, Peoples Speaking to Peoples, The University of Chicago Press, 1946. Pp., ix, 122. $2.00.

Cooperation among nations of the world in promoting understanding of all peoples has never been needed more urgently than at the present. With a new world governing body cutting its teeth on prejudices and political barriers, it is evident that one of the surest and quickest ways to achieve complete understanding is to bring within the reach of all countries the physical facilities of transmitting words and images across national boundaries and of achieving a degree of quality, accuracy, and total balance calculated to give a fair picture of life in all parts of the globe.

Those are the premises adopted by authors White and Leigh in preparing their recommendations for international communications cooperation. Their primary concern is action—immediate action.

Certainly the facilities for transmitting information are in existence. Sailors sitting in U. S. warships tied alongside Hong Kong docks last fall received daily news reports directly from American short wave stations and they listened to Australian commentators give their analyses of the affairs of the day. Giant Navy flying boats brought in mail and news from home postmarked only ten days before, and English-printed Hong Kong papers offered still a different source of daily happenings.

But while the Americans enjoyed this up-to-date account of world affairs, their Chinese brothers-in-arms on shore scarcely were aware of what was happening outside of the city. Cause for much of this ignorance was due to lack of facilities for transmittal of news, chiefly because of illiteracy and various Chinese governmental restrictions.

In the light of conditions such as these, the Commission on Freedom of the Press was created under the sponsorship of Time, Inc., and the University of Chicago to consider the freedom, functions, and responsibilities of major agencies of mass communication. The scientific report prepared by Mr. White and Mr. Leigh is a proposal of the part to be played by the government of the United States to help bring about a more complete international understanding.

Expressing what they feel to be the need in the field of international communications, the authors state: "It is the linking of all the habitable parts of the globe with abundant, cheap, significant, true information about the world from day to day, so that all men increasingly may have the opportunity to learn, know and understand each other."

In as much as the problem is of an international nature, the authors naturally propose that appropriate United Nations committees also cooperate, chiefly in removing political barriers and lessening economic restrictions which impede the flow of information across national borders. The adoption of a mass communications policy is long overdue.

ROBERT L. EDWARDS

CHARLES MERGENDAHL, His Days Are as Grass. Little, Brown and Company, Boston. Pp. 398. $2.75.

One of the most delightful and at the same time painful pastimes in which we indulge is reminiscing. While the old saw that time heals all wounds may not be entirely true, it is certain that time does alleviate to a great extent painful memories; and, in some cases, we can recall only with sentiment and a sense of loss, perhaps, the "good old days." If, like myself, you are one of those who like to remember, to wonder what incident or incidents have changed your outlook or your position in this unstable world; or, if you like to speculate as to how your environment has made you what you are, His Days Are as Grass is the book for you to read. No, you will not find the answer to your memories and speculations in Mergendahl's book, but contained therein is the straightforward story of a boy who was born, lived, loved, fought in World War II, and was killed. He tells you what he thought, what he did, and, in so far as it was possible, why he did it. Yet His Days Are as Grass is far from being merely an analysis of a growing mind. It is a delightful, sensitive, honest, interesting story with a wistful and an ethereal quality which you will not only enjoy and remember, but which will start you reminiscing.

All of which brings me to a speculation of my own. I have often wondered how I would be able to interest a reader in an autobiographical novel. How would I be able to recreate the realism I felt and saw without being tiresome and verbose? Readers demand realism. Yet, if they were subjected to blow by blow, knock-down, drag-out realism, they would be so bored, so crammed with detail, that they would throw the novel in the wastebasket, and that would be its rightful place. But nevertheless, Mergendahl has given us realism. His characters, even those who are in the story a short time, such as the burlesque queen, the nymphomaniac, and the tough Marine sergeant who swore only at the people he liked, were as vitally alive and vivid as Gordon Taylor, the central figure of the novel. Mergendahl accomplished this feat in three ways: economy of character and incident, suggestion, and dramatic repetition. Economy of character and incident is particularly important in a novel of this type, and obviously lacking in the disjointed chronicle style of some authors who are either carried away by recollection and rush headlong into their pasts, succeeding only in giving the reader a mass of untied impressions, or try so hard to be faithful to their past that the reader is forced to swallow quarts of black coffee to yawn his somnolent way through their novels. We meet only the most important people in Gordon Taylor's life, and we experience only those incidents which have a definite effect on him.

The use of suggestion to create effects is one of the author's strongest points, and he has used it extremely well. A particularly effective instance of this device is presented in chapter XVII when Gordie goes to his first burlesque show. After the performance, he and his friend, Tooky, go backstage to see if they can get a glimpse of Wanda Lavalley. They see her when she goes to the stage door to have a cigarette. Seeing the two young boys watching her, she voices her annoyance in alley slang, throws the cigarette into the gutter, and slams the door in their faces.

Gordie didn't say anything. He looked at the cigarette in the gutter. There was red lipstick on the end and dirty gutter water was soaking through it, putting out the glow, discoloring the lipstick.

"Let's go," he said.

They went off down the alley.

By suggestion we learn what Wanda was like and how she affected Gordie.

In contrast to such economy of effect, Mergendahl uses considerable dramatic repetition. He has the dramatist's as well as the novelist's approach to his material. Perhaps because of the more obvious device of repetition, rather than the subtlety of economy and suggestion, he will have at least popular future success.

FARMINGTON

More than fifty members and their lady guests gathered at the Rangeley Lake House on Monday, June 8, for the annual meeting of the Bowdoin Club of Franklin County. Bridge and outdoor diversions during the afternoon preceded dinner in the main dining room. President John R. Bass '00 spoke in humorous vein of his shortcomings as a club president but maintained that he would complete a speech which he had begun twenty-five years ago. His references to the accomplishments of his class drew interesting comment from Dr. George L. Pratt and President Sills, both members of 1901. Gould Porter '91, the oldest alumnus present and Nelson "Sonny" Austin '41, the youngest, spoke briefly. Harry F. Smith '25, Council member from the club and Seward J. Marsh '12, Alumni Secretary, told of the work being done by the Alumni Council. Stating that strong liberal arts colleges are needed to teach young men and women to think, President Sills outlined the problems of the College with its suddenly enlarged enrollment and pled for a continuance of Alumni help that the best of entering students might be selected. Rev. H. G. Lewis, a graduate of Hiram College, minister of the Wilton Congregational Church, played as Robert "Bunny" Bass '40 led singing. Officers elected for 1946-47 are: President, Dr. Henry E. Marston '99 of North Anson; Vice-President, Arthur L. Smith '09 of New Vineyard; Secretary-treasurer, Benjamin Butler '28 of Farmington. Harry F. Smith '25 was reelected to the Council.

For the convenience of alumni who have recently changed their addresses, there is appended a list of the secretaries of the several active alumni clubs. Those secretaries will be glad to hear from newcomers to their areas. The Alumni Office will also be delighted to learn what those new addresses are.

Looking

As a sort of dress rehearsal, preparatory to the expected graduation a year later of the first college class, exercises were held in September, 1805, at which selected students appeared before a "small but respectable audience" of townspeople, faculty, overseers and trustees and delivered original orations. The Portland Gazette reported that the audience were "highly gratified and somewhat surprised at the very manly and sensible compositions" and compared the quality of the occasion favorably with commencements at the "ancient and respectable seminary" at Cambridge.

The "first grand commencement", as the Gazette characterized it, was scheduled to occur on the first Wednesday in September, 1806. A fearful storm postponed the event until Thursday, and a subscription ball was hastily arranged for the intervening Wednesday evening.

It was still raining on Thursday morning, and the audience in the unfinished church building where the exercises were held were well spattered. President McKen presided in the pulpit with an umbrella over his head. All seven members of the graduating class participated and received their diplomas as eagerly as if the sun were shining. The first commencement parade led to Massachusetts Hall, where the first commencement dinner took place, — furnished, as nowadays, by the college and served on yellow crockery, some of which is still treasured as heirlooms after subsequent use in the college commons.

In the evening occurred the first commencement ball, which was "attended by more fashion and beauty than ever before appeared in the District of Maine. One hundred and twenty ladies and a greater number of gentlemen were present...and a stranger would have imagined himself in Boston or New York rather than in a humble village."

The rain still continued, and among the misadventures that occurred in the gullied and muddy streets after the ball was the overturning, at the riverbank on the approach to the Topsham bridge, of the carriage carrying General Knox and a group of ladies and gentlemen.

The class of '76 graduated 43 members. Class Day on Tuesday of Commencement week ended with the "dance on the green" under the Thorndike Oak. Chandler's Band furnished the music, the campus was lighted with chinese lanterns, and until a shower scattered the dancers, the affair was "the most brilliant ever in Brunswick." Commencement exercises lasted only two hours, because only ten members of the class participated instead of the whole class as in previous years. Over 200 alumni were at the Commencement dinner. The suggestion from Harvard that graduating seniors wear knee breeches was not accepted, nor was the church decorated with red, white and blue bunting as the Orient urged. J. A. Morrill (later to be justice of the Maine Supreme Court) was salutatorian.

Six of the 18 events scheduled for field day were abandoned for lack of contestants. The Orient deplored the lack of interest in athletics, condemned the short "rah, rah, rah" that was replacing the "old fashioned cheer", and urged that football be made an organized athletic activity. "The game is now growing in importance elsewhere" but at Bowdoin was played only casually and with no definite rules.

The Smythe Mathematical prize was founded. Leslie A. Lee joined the faculty. Longfellow contributed to the Orient his sonnet on Parker Cleveland.

The Augusta team in the New England league spent two weeks in practice with the Bowdoin team.

R. S. Hagar was editor in chief of the Orient and P. P. Baxter (later Governor of the State) and T. L. Marble (now Chief Justice of New Hampshire) were assistants.

The custom of omitting classes the morning after the indoor meet was cancelled by a faculty announcement that classes would be held as usual on March 23. Talk being rife of a general strike against the ruling, the president announced in chapel that morning that any such concerted action would be dealt with summarily. The class of 1902 took the dare, and with the exception of one or two members holding scholarships, the members of the class absented themselves from all classes. No formal vote in class meeting was taken, but word was passed around and pickets enforced it with physical and well as vocal suasion. Economics and German were the courses most conspicuously hit. Members of the class also tried to induce other students to join in the strike. An undercurrent of sympathy with 1902 did not produce any concerted action by other classes, but did result in a large number of individual absences.

As 1902 remembers it, Professor Robinson urged them to take common action by re-matriculating, but some of the class felt that the class had the College at its mercy, because the requirements of the college charter for four separate and distinct classes could not be met as long as 1902 was suspended. More sober counsels prevailed however and the class yielded, but it is apparent from the faculty record that the outcome of the whole matter was a sensible compromise: the College didn't punish the offenders; the offenders agreed not to do it again. "Class cuts", which had become

Within a few years the ranking system, which may have had something to do with class cuts, was changed. By that system, attendance was ranked on a scale of 6, scholarship on a scale of 10, and the two averaged on a scale of 8. The result was that absence was reflected directly in rank, and could therefore be disregarded by those who were not either close to the lower edge or eager for honors. A class cut reduced everybody's rank by the same figure, and was dangerous only to the man on the brink of failure.

1921

The Student Council unanimously voted to back up Ostergren, the newly elected football coach. At a mass meeting the students and squad had favored another candidate for the position.

Action permitting basketball was taken by the Faculty, but campus opponents feared it would interfere with track.

The Orient, completing its fiftieth

The Annie Talbot Cole lecturer was Dr. Paul Elmer More. His subject was the Spirit of Early New England.

The Medical School bill passed both houses, but was vetoed by Governor Baxter on the ground that the state could not afford the money that would be involved in maintaining a first class school. The veto was sustained in the house, and the Medical School of Maine came to an end.

The Bowdoin was launched at East Boothbay and started for the Arctic under the command of Don MacMillan.

In athletics the college closed a memorable year: champion or co-champion of the state in football, baseball, track and tennis. The baseball team won from Amherst, Wesleyan, Trinity, Worcester PI, and Brown, losing, outside the state only, to N.H.U., Holy Cross and Norwich.

More Than Sixty Thousand From Almost Sixty Percent

*Chairman Francis P. Freeman '22 Presents
Summary of the 1945-46 Alumni Fund*

WITH justifiable pride, your Fund Directors report $63,280.97 and 3353 contributions, as the final results of the 1945-46 Alumni Fund. Both figures are new highs. We exceeded our dollar objective and came close to our aim for a 60% participation. Deducting contributions made in memoriam, there were 3156 actual contributors in the 51 solicited, competing class groups — 58.9% of the members of good address. Significant and gratifying is the fact that of our grand total of 3316 living contributors are more than 600 non-graduate alumni who became Alumni Association members for the first time this year.

Veteran John F. Dana of 1898 again chalks up the highest performance score, but since that perennially 100% class declines to compete for the Class of 1906 Alumni Fund Cup, first place goes to 1937 whose agent, Dan Christie, has served repeated warnings in recent years that his class was on its way to the top. Francis S. Dane and the Class of 1896 close their long and honorable active Fund competition by placing second, closely followed by Sam Ladd and 1929.

More complete comment will appear in the Whispering Pines but I must not fail to mention here a few notable features of this 1945-46 Alumni Fund. First and foremost, 28 classes responded to our appeal for a 60% participation and 12 other classes registered 50% or more of their members. Four classes, '96, '98, '01 and '03 turned in perfect 100% scores. Secondly, there are now 28 classes (including Dr. Pettingill's medical group) whose dollar totals are in four figures. The young classes continue to crowd their older brethren for top places, and, of particular interest to me is the notable improvement shown by classes of my college generation, 1921, 1922 and 1924 deserving special notice.

To all who labored to bring about these record-breaking Fund achievements go the sincere thanks and appreciation of the College and of my colleagues on the Board of Fund Directors. As always, of course, the major portion of the praise belongs to the agents, without whose conscientious and enthusiastic personal efforts we could not make this report.

As I conclude my official Fund labors I extend to Chairman Widgery Thomas and his cohorts my blessing and the sincere wish that their report for next year's Fund will eclipse the records set forth here.

THE 1945-46 ALUMNI FUND

Harrison K. McCann '02, of McCann-Erickson, Inc., said in tribute to Mr. Weld: "In the death of Louis Weld the advertising industry has lost one of its soundest analysts and one of its straightest thinkers. Dr. Weld was an unusually direct person, both in speech and in action. He had an open mind, and I never knew him to be prejudiced either for or against an issue or a person. His opinions and decisions were based on facts which he ferreted out with great persistence. When he felt that his facts justified his conclusions, he stuck to his decisions with great tenacity. He had a mind that cut through all superficialities and went directly to the heart of a subject. His interpretation of facts was calm and judicial.

His decisions were clear and clean-cut. He had a fine sense of honor and was highly popular with those who worked with him and came to know him well."

News of the Classes

FOREWORD

Publicity can be quite a headache to people who neither seek nor desire it. Owing to a late development in a certain line of sport, the Class News Man has had a lot of unsolicited advertising; and within a few days, July 18, my friend Adriel Bird of the reticent Class of 1916, has been the subject of an attack by no less a person than the Boston Herald's Bill Cunningham. But if what Cunningham says is authentic, though it reads rather hyperbolic, it is possible that Adriel had it coming to him.

NOW AND THEN

I

*I went into the Old End the other day
To find one of the boys, a friend of mine.
years ago
To install those essential units of modern life:
Showers, running water, lavatories and such.
There was no rearrangement of the rooms,
Except that the inside bedrooms in each End
Had been cut down to make more space
For the aforesaid modern necessities.
The windows have half-sash glass
Which give more light, and are less work to clean.
The small old-fashioned panes
On which past generations of boys
Had scratched their names or initials;
And the old coal closet doors,
On which were more "graphiti" of former tenants,*

Were gone. Too bad in a way, they were historical.

*But—and how can I express it Without doing violence to civil speech?—
Along the halls were draped (even along the stairs,
And in each room as well) cast-iron pipes Designed, when they became too hot, to flood the place;
Fire prevention and control;
Necessary perhaps in these enlightened times,
But O how hideous!*

II

*I've seen those stairs swimming in water,
And the floors also, when the Sophs
Called the huckless Freshmen out,
And sent them bounding from ground floor
to the top,
Wet down on every flight from Sophomore pails;
This was not fire drill, but only discipline.
The halls still looked somewhat the worse for wear;
An occasional door had been kicked in;
And in the rooms, from the unsightly
pipes, Clothes hangers with their loads were draped;
Steam radiators had replaced coal stoves,
As had electric lights the kerosene.
And as I looked I wondered if the boys today
Were better, or worse, or any different From what we were in our time; probably much the same.
Be that as it may, I'm glad I lived there in the eighth decade.*

President Kenneth C. M. Sills was honored by President Mildred McAfee Horton of Wellesley College at Wellesley's commencement in June. President Horton read the following special citation in honor of President Sills, who was a member of the Board of Trustees: "President Kenneth Sills of Bowdoin College became a part of the Wellesley community when he married Edith L. Koon of the class of 1911. Within nine years she had educated this distinguished son of Bowdoin to the point where it became evident that Wellesley needed him as a trustee. From that point on he has responded to our need whenever it appeared. As an experienced administrator, President Sills has brought to the college an invaluable understanding of the way a good academic institution should function. His voice has always been raised in favor of those expenditures which should strengthen the intellectual vitality of the faculty and therefore of the students." President Sills completed three six-year terms as trustee of Wellesley and was therefore ineligible for reappointment as a trustee.

The class celebrated its 45th by taking over the Harriet Beecher Stowe house for its reunion, entertaining from Thursday noon to the time when the march from the church to the gym began on Saturday afternoon. The festivities were built around a big ham and 18 pounds of the kind of cheese that used to taste so good before Hitler, with plenty to drink. Following the Commencement luncheon, the members of the class went to Lakewood where Mrs. Herbert L. Swett, her two daughters, and a son-in-law were waiting with cocktail shakers poised at the farm. Class dinner at the Lakewood Restaurant followed with a choice of steak or broiled lobster. An evening of close companionship, followed by a night's rest in Lakewood's glorious cabins and breakfast, with a leisurely breaking up of the party on Sunday was enjoyed. Those attending the 45th reunion were Berry and wife, Braggs, Clark and wife, Cloudman, Corliss and wife, Evans, Fenley, Flint, Leighton and wife, Pratt, Sanborn, President and Mrs. Sills, Vose, Wheeler, and White and wife. The evening was spent in the Abbott's pleasant living room, and they confessed that it was their 40th wedding anniversary. Most of the visitors spent the night at the colony and had breakfast down the road the next morning before going up to Brunswick for the Commencement activities. A message to the boys and girls of Maine

It only looks greener!

As far back as memory goes, the grass over the fence has appeared greener to young people. But sometimes it seems a terrible waste of pleasant pastures when a high percentage of the youth of a given community falls for the delusion and wanders abroad.

So strong is our love of our State, so great our expectations for its future as a place to work and live, that we can't resist exploding the old "green grass over the fence" myth.

Central Maine Power Company has, for many years, urged graduates of Maine schools and colleges to stay in Maine. Each year we have launched two score or more young men on a career in electricity, and will continue to do so. We know of many State of Maine industries where equal opportunities are regularly made for young men and women who are ready to go into business.

Let it never be said that "the grass over the fence is greener". We of CMP know better. It only looks greener.

Let Us Heed Lincoln

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in; to bind up the Nation's wounds; to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow, and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves, and with all nations."

Lincoln said this in 1865. Had Lincoln lived, reconstruction might have been a blessing, not a scourge.

The world is now facing reconstruction. Lincoln's words are pertinent in today's crisis and should be read and taken to heart at the beginning of every peace conference.
